Arrest and Admission to Bail of the Incendiaries.

AFFAIRS AT QUARANTINE YESTERDAY.

PROVISION FOR THE SICK.

DESCRIPTION OF THE RUINS.

Movement to Protect the Shipping

Action of the New-York and Brooklyn Boards of Health

Several of the leading Quarantine incendiaries were arrested at Tompkinsville early on Saturday morning, before they had got out of their beds, upon a warrant issued by Justice WELSH. Sergeant WATERBURY and detectives WILSEY and STAPELMOOR, with a rifle corps, went out and arrested CHARLES S. DE FOREST, Justice of the Peace, WM. MULLER and other s They were immediately conveyed to the City. RAY TOMPKINS was arrested on Friday evening. They were all taken before Justice WELSH, as will be seen from the report published below, and admitted to bail.

The Police force at Quarantine consists of 100 men under command of Captain WALLACE, who led the forces at the seige of Sebastopol. Each man is armed with a volcanic repeating rifle, loaded with twenty balls, which can all be fired in less than two minutes, the aggregate is equal to one thousand shots. They also have a brass 6 pound howitzer under charge of Sergeants DICKSON and KING. Each charge consists of 124 musket balls. They are provided with 150 rounds of these shot, and each of the Rifle corps has a large supply of ammunition. This is a formidable show, and appears to excite in the natives mingled emotions of astonishment and derision.

The rumor that the shipping would be burned created much excitement among the Captains of vessels, who came ashore and made anxious inquiries of Dr. WALLER on the subject. The Deputy Health Officer quieted their fears, and they returned on board. An extra anchor watch, however, was set on board each vessel, and many an old rusty musket was got up and loaded to give a warm reception to anybody approaching the vessels with evil designs.

The President of the United States was telegraphed to, and informed of the state of affairs. He immediately sent back directions to General SCOTT to make use of all necessary means at his disposal to protect the shipping and Government property. The frigate Sabine was moved from her moorings off the Battery to a place within striking distance of Quarantine.

The Hospital buildings will be replaced as soon as the necessary appropriation can be made. Meantime temporary accommodations will be provided for the sick, whose numbers are being daily augmented by fresh arrivals. Eighteen new cases of yellow fever have arrived since Friday. The patients were detained in the steamboat until the tent accommodations could be provided.

DRS. THOMPSON, BISSELL and WALKER, are doing all that lies in their power to alleviate their condition.

There are some 150 warrants out for various parties, and the Police are on the alert for those supposed to be concerned in the outrages.

The Incendiaries in Court.

EXAMINATION BEFORE JUSTICE WELSH — AFFIDAVITS AGAINST THE DEFENDANTS—THEIR RELEASE ON BAIL.

The new Court Room under the Mayor's Office, presided over by Justice WELSH, was the scene of unusual excitement Saturday morning. RAY TOMPKINS, Justice CHARLES DE FOREST, MATHEW CARROLL, WM. MULLER, JACOB VANDERBILT, THOMAS GARRETT and JOHN C. THOMPSON, who had been arrested on warrants issued by the Magistrate, charging them with aiding in the recent burning and demolition of the Quarantine buildings, were brought before the Justice for examination. Warrants had been issued for the arrest of over a dozen persons, but the seven above named were the only ones who had been arrested. The prisoners, instead of manifesting any concern in the matter, appeared quite jolly, and received and returned the nods and congratulations of their various friends present, with perfect composure.

The officers in whose nominal custody the prisoners were, obligingly stood in the background and let matters take their natural course. A few serious persons were present and made preliminary comments upon the scene. They declared that the whole ceremony was the ridiculous opening of a sublime farce.

At 12 M., —this being the hour assigned for the examination,—Justice WELSH stated his readiness to proceed in the case.

Three lawyers, headed by JAMES T. BRADY, Esq. appeared as counsel for the prisoners, and made a motion to admit them to bail. The prisoners waived any preliminary examination.

Justice WELSH said he would send the papers forthwith before the Court of General Sessions, and fix the bail of each prisoner at $2,000, to appear for trial.

Counsel expressed their satisfaction at the amount of bail named, but they objected to the papers being sent before any Court in this City, and desired the Justice to enter their protest to such effect.

Justice WELSH entered the desired protest, and then asked if the prisoners were ready with their bail.

Mr. BRADY remarked that CORNELIUS VANDERBILT would go bail for some of the prisoners, and that they were only waiting his arrival to have the necessary bonds signed. WM. MULLER and JOHN C. THOMPSON were immediately bailed—Mr. FREDERIK GOWTS becoming surety for the former, and Mr. W. H. VANDERBILT for the latter. It was nearly two hours before Mr. CORNELIUS VANDERBILT arrived.

During the interim the unbailed prisoners, their counsel, the officers and a few confidential friends sat in the Justice's private office, whiling away the time in pleasant conversation and getting off spicy jokes. Mr. VANDERBILT at once signed the bail bonds for the remaining five prisoners, and the whole party were forthwith liberated from custody. They retired from the Court feeling apparently as jolly and unconcerned as when they entered. The following are the affidavits made against the accused parties:

Elisha H. Wilday, being duly sworn, deposes and says—That he is one of the officers of the Metropolitan Police Department; that on Wednesday last, at Staten Island, one Charles De Forest, a Justice of the Peace of the town of Castleton, of said island, told, disclosed, admitted, and confessed to this deponent, that on the night previous he, the said De Forest, by means of a ladder, ascended to, and descended from, the wall inclosing the Quarantine Hospital, into the Quarantine inclosure, and upon the Quarantine grounds; and that he then, within said inclosure, placed a bundle of straw within a large building forming part of the Hospital establishment, saturated said straw with camphene, and then fired the said combustible material by means of a lighted torch; that by said means the said building was burned and destroyed; he further boasted that if he had not sprained his ankle he would have burned certain other buildings within said inclosure, or, as he expressed it, "would have burned the lower buildings;" he said that a part of the crowd who were with him at the time promised him that if he would burn the big building on the hill (the building aforesaid, to which he applied the fire) that they would burn the lower buildings; that he performed his part of the agreement, but that the crowd backed out from performing their part of the agreement; he repeated said language in the presence of Mr. Connolly, reporter of the New-York Sun, and of Cristopher McDougall, one of the detectives of the Metropolitan Police; deponent further says that the building aforesaid and described as the big building on the hill, and which the said De Forest confessed to burning, was burned and destroyed on the night of the 1st of September, 1858, and that deponent has no doubt that said burning was the act of an incendiary; further, that the building so burned and destroyed was a part of the Quarantine Hospital establishment of the port of New-York, was within the Quarantine inclosure and was burned and destroyed for the purpose of impeding the Health Officer of the port of New-York in the discharge of the duties of his office, in enforcing the Quarantine laws of the State of New-York; the said De Forest also admitted, confessed and disclosed to this deponent, that he adjourned a case before him as a justice expressly to enable him to make arrangements to burn down the building so fired by him; the said case was an inquiry into the alleged disease of Mrs. Brannan, a case pending before said De Forest as Justice, in which inquiry deponent and said McDougall were engaged as detectives; the said adjournment was made on Monday, the 31st of August, over to Wednesday, the 1st instant; the said Justice De Forest, alleging in deponent's presence that he could not attend to the case before the 2d instant.

Thomas Carroll, of Tompkinsville, Richmond County, being duly sworn, doth depose and says: That he is paymaster of Quarantine, and that on the evening of the 1st of September, 1858, he saw one of the Metropolitan Policemen that is stationed at the Quarantine take the men belonging to the Quarantine (who were doing all that laid in their power to put out the fire) in charge, and endeavor to put them out of the Quarantine grounds; and that deponent remonstrated with said Policeman, and told him that the men were employees of the State; deponent then told Dr. Bissell of the circumstance, and he ordered the arrest of the said Policeman; and that the said Policeman was locked up in the jail of the Quarantine; and that deponent, in company with Dr. Bissell, was informed by Mrs. Abern, the nurse of the Small-pox Hospital, that Egbert was one of the men who set fire to the buildings, and by order of Dr. Bissell he arrested said Egbert, and while taking him to the jail deponent was intercepted by another Policeman who knew the said Egbert, and asked deponent what he was going to do with Egbert; and that deponent informed said Policeman that he was taking him to jail by the order of Dr. Bissell; and that the said Policemen took hold of deponent in a violent manner, and tried to release the said Egbert, and said to deponent that he would take Egbert in charge; deponent then gave the said Egbert in charge to one of the employees of the jail, and deponent then arrested the Policeman and locked him up in the jail, and by some means to deponent unknown said parties were released from custody; and deponent further says that he does not know the names of the said Policemen, but can identify them if he ever sees them.

John P. Raymond being duly sworn, deposes and says: That he is a resident of Southfield, Richmond County; that he was in Tompkinsville on the night of the 2d of September instant; that he was present and witnessed the destruction of the State property at Quarantine; that he saw on the Quarantine grounds and within the Quarantine inclosure the following persons, residents of Richmond County, viz: Mathew Carroll, —— Muller, Ray Tompkins, Charles Stebbins and Jacob Vanderbilt; and that he verily believes the said Muller and Tompkins were abettors in the work of setting fire to the State's property.

Richard H. Thompson being duly sworn, deposes and says: That he is Health Officer of the port of New-York; that ten persons named in the above affidavit were not permitted to enter the Quarantine grounds on the night of the 2d instant; that in being there they violated the Quarantine laws of this port, and therefore prays for their arrest and punishment.

Simeon T. Shiel, of the Marine Hospital, Richmond County, being duly sworn, doth depose and say, that P. O'Brien, of Tompkinsville, Staten Island, was one of the party that demolished the Quarantine buildings on the 2d day of September, 1858, and that deponent saw the said O'Brien breaking in the gatehouse and other buildings with an axe, and that said O'Brien was very conspicuous in the affray.

John J. Tuster, of Tompkinsville, Richmond County, being duly sworn, doth depose and say, that he saw —— Schwarm, of Stapleton, in said county, throw a barrel into the boat-house of the Quarantine, while said boat-house was on fire, so as to feed the fire, on the evening of Sept. 2, 1858.

Michael McCabe, of Tompkinsville, Richmond County, being duly sworn, doth depose and say, that he arrested Richard Garrett, in the Quarantine grounds, in the act of setting fire to one of the Quarantine buildings with a lighted torch, on the evening of the 1st of September, 1858, and that Garrett was locked up in the Quarantine jail by deponent, and by means unknown to deponent said Garrett made good his escape; and deponent further says that he saw John C. Thompson, of Tompkinsville, piling beds on one another and setting fire to the same, and throwing the beds against the hospital so as to fire the said hospital, and that he was aided and abetted by a large number of persons whom deponent could identify if he could see them, but does not know their names.

William H. Cunningham, of Tompkinsville, Richmond county, being duly sworn, deposes and says: That he saw John Carroll, Captain O'Brien and Thomas Garrett breaking down the walls of the Quarantine inclosure with a battering ram, and that said parties were aided and abetted by a large number of persons whom deponent cannot identify; and to the best of deponent's knowledge Richard Garrett was one of the party, and the said offence was perpetrated on the evening of the 2d of September, 1858.

Alfred Van Cleef, of Tompkinsville, Richmond county, being duly sworn, doth depose and say—That he saw Charles De Forest, now here, set fire to the boat-house on the Quarantine grounds, situated in the said county of Richmond, and that said defendant was aided and abetted by William Muller —— Kiesler, on the evening of the 2d of September, 1858.

David McSymon, of Tompkinsville, Richmond county, being duly sworn, doth depose and say—That, on the evening of the 1st September, 1858, he saw Richard Garrett and Patrick O'Hare under arrest in the Quarantine grounds, and deponent aided in placing them in jail; and that deponent saw John C. Thompson and Ray Tompkins come out of the house of Dr. Thompson, and John C. Thompson had a lamp in his hands.

Death of the Man Shot at Quarantine.

CORONER'S INQUEST AND VERDICT.

FRANK MATHEWS, the stevedore who was shot on the morning of the first incendiary attack on the Quarantine buildings at Tompkinsville, died, on Saturday, at the New-York Hospital. Coroner PERRY held an inquest on the body yesterday, but was unable to procure the attendance of any witnesses except Dr. J. W. HOOKER, the House-surgeon at the Hospital. The statement of MATHEWS has already been published in the TIMES. The Coroners, for some reason, did not feel it incumbent upon them to take his ante-mortem examination. The evidence given by the Doctor corroborates the published statement.

Dr. HOOKER testified that the deceased was admitted to the Hospital at 9 o'clock on the morning of the 2d inst., suffering from a gun-shot wound in the back. MATHEWS told him that he was shot the evening previous at Quarantine, Staten Island, with a musket in the hands of one of the attaches of the Hospital. Upon his admission to the Hospital, he was a good deal prostrated, but had lost but little blood. The wound was in the eleventh dorsal vertebræ, about an inch to the right of the medium line. There were three small openings and one of them could be traced about four inches. The wounds produced a paralysis of the lower limbs. A post-mortem examination of the body showed that the ninth and tenth vertebræ were injured. In the tenth vertebræ was found a large wad of paper embedded in the muscular tissue. Four slugs were found in the ninth and tenth vertebræ, and in the adjacent parts of the body seven additional slugs were found. Internal hemorrhage was the immediate cause of death.

There being no further evidence, the Jury rendered the following verdict:

"That FRANK MATHEWS, the deceased, came to his death from a gun-shot wound received during the late riot at Quarantine ground, Staten Island, Sept. 1, 1858, at the hands of some person unknown to the Jury."

The deceased was 24 years of age, and a native of Holland. He has been a sailor during the past six years, and was last employed on the brig Undine, which runs between this port and Hanover. He had been employed at Quarantine about six weeks.

Appearance of Quarantine.

The hands of the Vandals of Staten Island were not raised in violation of law yesterday. With an exhibition of humanity which must have possessed all the novelty of a new sensation to the incendiaries, the sick were allowed to rest in the barn and tents provided for them, and to receive the attentions of the physicians, and of Commissioner GARRIQUE and others, for their comfort and restoration. But the evidence of their villainous work was there in the tottering pillars of the Women's Hospital, in its broken walls; in the blackened interior of the "deadhouse;" in the ruins of buildings, from which the sick were dragged and thrown out upon the damp ground amid the storm; in the destruction of ornamental trees, and shrubs, and flowers; and of all that industry, experience and taste had devised to render the suffering immigrant as comfortable and pleasant as his condition would permit. The air of neatness, so agreeable to the invalid, was replaced by a desolation that was painful to look upon; and the quiet so necessary to successful treatment of disease was broken by the noise of a camp filled with armed men.

Around the walls there were thousands of spectators climbing up, and in every possible way endeavoring to get a view of the ruin within. The breaches were examined with great apparent curiosity; and the man, woman or child who could tell where the first sally was made, or where the treacherous firemen went through, to increase instead of to extinguish the flames, was sure of a crowd of eager and admiring listeners. The vigilance of the Police was a sore drawback upon the gratification of the public curiosity. The main entrance was closely guarded; and if any had the temerity to scale the walls, they were summarily ejected. Just inside the main entrance is the camp of the armed Police. On the right the Commissary General has his quarters, with an inviting array of camp kettles, bread and cheese, and tureens of turtle soup, the principal ingredient of which is furnished from the turtle-pen of the Health Officer. Further along on the main road the tents of the Police are pitched, and from there they are detailed on sentinel duty around the walls and throughout the grounds. From the tents of the Police until near the United States Government storehouse there is nothing but blighted trees and charred ruins. Beyond them, on the same line, are the marines sent down to guard the property of the United States Government, which they do by interfering with those who are engaged in caring for the sick, while their Captain hob-nobs with the leader of the Vandals, whom he brings to his quarters in a Government boat, in violation of the expressed wish of the Health Officer of the port.

On the rising ground the tents for the sick are ranged, and there those who have not been provided for elsewhere are situated. From that point you command a view of the criminal work that has been done. From other points the ruins of one, two, or three buildings are visible, but from yet have the ruins of thirty-two edifices fully in view; and from there you can form the best idea of the extent of the injury that has been done. You can there see, in all their length and breadth, the degrading evidences of a deed more villainous, and as cruel, than you will care to dwell upon; and you can there regret that, while the Government has the power, it has not the inclination, to punish the offenders. Gathered in and around the Nautilus Hotel, they laugh when punishment is spoken of. They allege that such an act is not punishable in Richmond County; that there are not twelve men in it that would find them guilty, and that the political importance of the Island would protect them against molestation from the State authorities, be they Republicans, Americans, or Democrats.

Quarantine Yesterday.

CONDITION OF THE SICK—ERECTION OF TEMPORARY PLACES OF SHELTER—APPREHENSIONS OF FRESH OUTRAGES—SINGULAR CONDUCT OF CAPTAIN RICH, OF THE MARINES—RAY TOMPKINS ON THE QUARANTINE GROUNDS—THE POLICE FORCE.

Notwithstanding the previous announcement that the sick at Quarantine had been comfortably provided for, their situation remained unchanged up to a late hour Saturday evening, at which time a portion of them were provided with tents, others were placed in Dr. THOMPSON's barn, the only remaining building on the ground, and some twenty of the convalescent were conveyed to Ward's Island during a pouring rain, late on Saturday afternoon. Those who were obliged to occupy the barn were very uncomfortable, and their groanings could be distinctly heard by the policemen on duty at a distance of three hundred yards. Eight additional cases of yellow fever arrived on Friday, and ten cases on Saturday and Sunday. They would be disposed of like the other cases.

Thus far the Deputy Health Officer has had his office in the open air, his desk being placed against the south fence. Yesterday a small temporary office was put up for his use, which will be ready for occupancy to-day. A large lead of lumber was sent down on Sunday, which was discharged upon the Quarantine dock. A building 200 feet long, 25 feet wide and of one story, will be put up immediately for the temporary accommodation of the sick.

Deputy-Superintendent CARPENTER yesterday visited the Island. Mr. CHOLLIS, Superintendent of Public Buildings, also visited the ruins in company with Mr. VOORHIES the contractor. The work of erecting this temporary structure will proceed at once, and be ready for use in a week or ten days. Iron buildings however will be substituted for the shanties which have been destroyed. Though denominated shanties, these buildings were pronounced excellent establishments for the purposes designed, being 120 feet long, 25 feet wide, well ventilated at the top and sides, and set up on brick pillars three feet from the ground.

The small pox hospital can be repaired with trifling expense, as the walls are not much damaged, but the St. Nicholas, Women's Hospital, Dr. BISSELL's and Dr. WALKER's houses, as well as all the other buildings, are total ruins, and the walls will have to come down. Many of the most beautiful trees near the burnt buildings have been ruined. The breaches in the walls have been boarded up, and the police are now wholly confined to the protection of the inside premises. The Castleton Board of Health announced that they would arrest them if they ventured outside the walls.

Rumors continued rife that the houses included within the infected district would be fired, and their occupants have been under constant apprehensions that these threats would be carried out, and have spent sleepless nights in consequence. On Saturday night two sisters who occupy the house in which Mr. MILES died a short time since, heard a noise outside, and on looking out one of them saw a crowd as if making efforts to fire her dwelling. The heavy rain, however, rendered the attempt abortive, and they went away. If these proceedings are renewed, and the private property of citizens destroyed, it is said there will be a serious riot among the mobocrats themselves, for while they consider fire a useful article in getting rid of State property, they are wholly disagreed as to the propriety of its application to the property of private citizens, many of whom are o their side.

The large coal heap of 600 tons continues to burn fiercely. Mr. CARRIQUE, of the Commissioners o Emigration, applied to HARRY HOWARD to permit an Engine Company to go down on the Staten Island boat, and put out the fire, in order to save part of the coal not yet burnt. Mr. HOWARD peremptorily refused. As the Engine Company in the village will not render the required assistance, the whole will be destroyed.

A strict guard is kept at the gate, and none are admitted in or out without a pass from Doctor WALKER. Mr. LOCKE, the United States Inspector, with Capt. RICH, who has charge of the marines, made an effort yesterday to get RAY TOMPKINS admitted, under the pretext that they wished to have him dine with them.

The gate-keeper, Captain DOYLE, refused, however, to permit him to pass the gate. Captain RICH then went to Doctor THOMPSON and asked of him permission for a friend to pass in whom he wished to dine with him. "Certainly," replied the Doctor, and immediately begun to write the necessary pass. "What is the name of your friend?" he inquired. "Mr. RAY TOMPKINS," answered RICH. "I cannot let in any such man," said Dr. THOMPSON. "Will you put that in writing?" RICH inquired. Doctor T. said he would, and immediately gave him a note, certifying that Captain RICH had made a request to have RAY TOMPKINS admitted to the Quarantine inclosure, and that the request was denied. This note, it is alleged, Captain RICH handed to the old gentleman at the gate as a pass, saying at the same time, "this is my friend, and made an effort to get TOMPKINS through the gate. A person near by, who observed the imposition attempted to be practiced, told the gate-keeper it was not a pass; by which time he had read the paper. This ruse having failed, Mr. LOCKE directed his boatmen to go to the Quarantine Landing with the United States barge, take TOMPKINS in, and land him at the United States store-house inside the Quarantine limits. The order was obeyed, and TOMPKINS, RICH and LOCKE, it is said, dined together. In the course of two hours the same barge conveyed the party back to the Quarantine Landing.

This flagrant disregard of the Quarantine authorities by a United States officer, in the most offensive form, was severely commented on by those who witnessed the transaction. Had the Health Officer observed the movement, and ordered the arrest of the intruder, it is more than probable it would have precipitated a collision between the Marines and the Police force. The law of Congress of 1799, makes it the duty of United States Army and Navy officers to assist in the enforcement of Health laws before all other regulations.

This same Captain RICH interfered with Mr. CARRIQUE in landing provisions at the United States Storehouse dock for the sick, when there was no other convenient landing-place, and forbid him from carrying patients past the Store-house, and taking them away from the landing in a steamboat. His whole conduct since he was sent to the place in charge of the Marines, has shown that his sympathies were wholly with the lawless party.

The following is the list of officers of the Police force at Quarantine:

Second Section, Sergeant VOSSEN.
Third Section, Sergeant PARSON.
Fourth Section, Sergeant TAFT.

First Company Artillery Sergeant, DICKSON.
Gunner, KING.

Action of the Health Commissioners.

THE CHARGES OF EXTORTION AT QUARANTINE—SPEECHES OF DR. THOMPSON, THE MAYOR, &C.

The Health Commissioners met at noon, Saturday. Alderman CLANCY read a report with regard to discharging vessels in the lower bay, endeavoring to refute the charges of extortion at Quarantine. Alderman CLANCY explained that in consequence of the nature of the work, it was necessary that high wages should be paid, but the schedule of prices was the same that had been agreed upon by men engaged in the business, and the rate of storage only double that of the Chamber of Commerce. This year, in consequence of the number of vessels arriving, a large portion had to be sent to the lower anchorage, and had thus the expense incurred. The report was signed by Mayor TIEMANN, JOHN CLANCY, CHARLES H. MARSHAL, and the Commissioners.

It was arranged that the five or six small-pox patients now at Quarantine, should be sent to the Almshouse.

Dr. THOMPSON said, with regard to the report submitted by him some time since, in favor of employing hulks for the storage of cargoes, that the Board had adopted the report, and referred the matter of employing hulks to the Mayor, with full power. This communication referred to the action of the Mayor in the premises. The Mayor has suggested the double charge, which was approved by the Board. The cry of extortion, it would be seen, was entirely incorrect, and instead of being blamed, the action of the Board should be approved of by the parties interested in the cargoes.

So much to reference to the particular charge of extortion: he desired to add something as to lighterage and stevedoring at Quarantine this season. He had noticed attacks on the Board in newspapers, in this connection, but the charges were groundless. The Health Officer made certain propositions on the subject, showing the necessity, in view of the public health, and the interests of commerce, that just enough stevedores to do the work, and no more, should be employed. He also exhibited a scale of prices, informed by a dozen leading stevedore houses, which prices were scrutinized by the Board and fully approved. Some weeks after, other parties applied for the privilege of discharging cargoes at Quarantine, but the prices they proposed to charge were no less than the prices fixed by the Board.

He desired to say a word as to the charges made against the Health Officer personally, in connection with the recent conflagrations at Quarantine. These charges had been used by one, or two papers partially as apologizing for the recent outrages. It was represented that the grievances of which Staten Islanders had complained was that the Health Officer had allowed stevedores and others to pass out of Quarantine with the garments which they had worn while at work inside. This charge was wholly untrue. No person had been allowed to go out without changing his clothes, and even then they were allowed to leave only with the understanding that they would return in a few hours. No sane man would apprehend danger to arise from such permission. These charges were gotten up and manufactured for another purpose, which was to remove the Quarantine, for the purpose of having an excuse for making an onslaught on the premises. Such an apology had been sought for for years, even before his administration. It was in keeping with other equally unfounded charges gotten up by the same parties.

When they consider that the parties who made these charges actually entered the Hospital and aided in carrying out yellow-fever patients, they could not but see that the horrid dread of infected stevedores was only a pretence.

These charges of extortion did not come from the merchants interested, but from the Sepoys of Staten Island, who burned the Hospitals. In his whole course and conduct he had the interest and health of the port at heart.

The Mayor desired the public to understand that he sent for Messrs. NYE and TALLMADGE in reference to protecting the buildings; but he was unable to find them. Subsequently the Vice-President of the Commissioners of Emigration told him that TALLMADGE had agreed to send sixty men down; but, on meeting TALLMADGE in the evening at the great dinner, that officer told the Mayor that no requisition had been made upon him, as he had sent down a few detectives. He did not believe that there would be any more trouble; for his part, he thought the excitement had been much exaggerated. Mr. TALLMADGE then went to dinner. The Mayor said he thought the Marines would be sufficient protection for the Quarantine buildings. He had done all that was in his power in the premises. He wanted it understood that those who had burned the buildings had not suffered from extortion. The secret of the whole outrage, in his opinion, was the desire of certain real estate owners to get rid of Quarantine, in order to increase the value of their property. If he had his way, instead of removing Quarantine, he would take thirty acres more of land, put up fire-proof buildings, and keep troops there to protect them.

On motion of Dr. ROCKWELL, the report of Alderman CLANCY was adopted.

The Mayor said he met with the Commissioners of Emigration and Governor KING yesterday, when tents were ordered down to Quarantine. These were some accommodation, but shanties ought to be put up temporarily.

Mr. HASWELL moved that a sufficient number of hemlock boards and joists for shanties be sent down, to be put up under the direction of the Commissioners of Repairs and Supplies. The motion prevailed.

Mr. MILLER said there was no doubt the public would uphold them in all measures necessary to protect the public health. It was not the merchants, but the people of Staten Island, who had made the outcry about extortion. He was surprised on Thursday night to find that no Police had been sent down, and to hear Mr. TALLMADGE say he had sent down a few detectives only, and there was no occasion for alarm. He thought the marines were not wholly blameless in the matter of the burning.

The Mayor said they had clearly failed in their duty. They were bound to protect the property of Quarantine.

Dr. ROCKWELL read the law on the subject, and insisted that it was the duty of the marines to protect the Quarantine buildings.

Mr. HASWELL moved that the Health Officer be directed to report to the Board, and to prosecute all persons ascertained to have invaded Quarantine. The motion was carried, and after the transaction of some routine business, the Board adjourned.

Action of the Commissioners of Emigration.

The Commissioners of Emigration met in Worth-street on Saturday morning; the President, GULIAN C. VERPLANCK, Esq., in the Chair. The meeting was private.

The following resolution was adopted:

Resolved, That the President and Commissioner CARRIGAN be appointed a committee to confer with the Mayor or Board of Health, in regard to the present situation of matters at Quarantine, and to make such suggestions to the said Board as may be proper for the accommodation of persons other than emigrants, who may arrive at this port affected with any infectious or contagious disease.

Messrs. BOWEN and NYE appeared before the Commissioners and communicated the state of affairs at Staten Island, and what had occurred during the last night.

The President of the Board, Mr. G. C. VERPLANCK, together with Mr. CARRIGAN, were appointed a Committee to represent to the Board of Health the immediate necessity of further accommodations, in the shape of wood or iron buildings, for the relief of patients laboring under yellow fever and other contagious diseases.

The Committee were instructed also to represent to the Board of Health, the inability of the Commissioners, in the present state of their finances, to apply the funds necessary for this purpose, and their opinion that they were not authorized to spend money for the purpose, the use of their funds being limited to the cause of emigrant aliens.

The Board adjourned to Monday.

Action of the Brooklyn Board of Health.

A special meeting of the Brooklyn Board of Health was held Saturday morning, Mayor POWELL in the Chair.

After the usual preliminary business had been disposed of, the following communication, by special request, was read:

BROOKLYN, Sept. 4, 1858.

Dr. SAMUEL K. BOYD, Health Officer—Dear Sir: Please allow me to suggest prompt and stringent action by yourself and the Board of Health, for the prevention of exposure to yellow fever by the burning of the Quarantine buildings. The easiness of access to the infected district may cause very disastrous results, unless decisive measures are adopted and rigidly enforced on the part of Brooklyn.

Yours, respectfully, J. L. DOUGLASS,
Alderman of the Tenth Ward.

The communication, by consent, was laid on the table. The Mayor subsequently stated that the Police Commissioners had directed the Harbor Police to prevent people from landing in Brooklyn, and he had also directed the Health Wardens to exercise unusual diligence.

This statement called up Health Warden FREST, who stated that in pursuance of the order of the Board, he had traced a lighterman from the infected district to a house in Tillary-street; that he had there incarcerated himself in an attic room, bolted the door and refused to surrender when ordered so to do. Officer FREST asked for instructions. The Board, with commendable zeal, authorized the officer to use all necessary force to arrest the obnoxious individual. The arrest was subsequently effected without bloodshed.

After the transaction of some other business, of no general interest, the Board adjourned.

Protection of the Shipping.

The threats by the Staten Islanders, on Friday, to burn the shipping, created intense excitement among the owners of vessels lying at Quarantine, as well as among the merchants generally.

A Committee of Underwriters and Merchants waited on Collector SCHELL, on Saturday afternoon, and the following documents presented to him, asking prompt action on his part for the protection of the shipping and cargoes at Quarantine:

NEW-YORK, Sept. 3, 1858.

To Honorable AUGUSTUS SCHELL, Collector of the Port of New-York:

SIR: The undersigned, underwriters of this City, are informed that the mob at Staten Island have threatened to burn the vessels there quarantined. These vessels have very large and valuable cargoes on board, of dutiable and undutiable goods. They respectfully ask that a sufficient force may be sent down to protect the property from destruction.

J. D. JONES, for Atlantic Mutual Ins. Co.
RICHARD LATHER, Great Western Ins. Co.
ELLWOOD WALTER, for Mercantile Mutual Ins. Co.
ALFRED EDWARDS, President Pacific Mutual Ins. Co.
SAMUEL DRAKE SHIVE, President Commercial Trust Ins. Co.

NEW-YORK, Sept. 3, 1858.

A. SCHELL, Esq., Collector:

The undersigned, representing very important interests in the cargoes of vessels recently arrived from the Island of Cuba, and now lying in Quarantine, for the safety of which, in the present excited state of feeling in the vicinage of Quarantine, there is reason to fear the most serious apprehensions, beg leave to call the attention of the Collector to the subject, and to solicit from him such protection to the property imperiled as is so manifestly required by existing circumstances.

It is currently reported, and we believe on reliable authority, that threats are already made to set fire to the shipping at the Upper Quarantine, and recent events sufficiently indicate the intentions of a portion of the community in relation to that matter. We remain, very respectfully, your obedient servants,

Grinnell, Minturn & Co.,	Simon de Visser,
J. M. Ceballos,	D. Curtiss & Dyckman,
Thomson & Hunter,	Galway, Canado & Tailer,
Peter V. King & Co.,	Pozzat Bros.,
Moses Taylor & Co.,	R. St. Jurgo,
Morris Bros., Navarro & Co.,	Robert & Williams,
E. D. Morgan & Co.,	A. D. Caton, brig State of Maine,
Peavoyt & Co.,
Gledin & Rubire,	C. R. Lord, brig Ortolan.

Upon receipt of the above letters, the Collector sent the following telegraphic dispatch to Secretary CASS:

CUSTOM-HOUSE, COLLECTOR'S OFFICE, Sept. 3, 1858—4 o'clock P. M.

Hon. HOWELL COBB, Secretary of the Treasury:

SIR: The destruction of the State buildings at Quarantine was completed last night. The presence of the marines saved the Government buildings. I have received a letter from a large number of persons asking protection for their ships and dutiable goods lying at Quarantine, which are threatened with destruction. As the Government is largely interested for duties, I desire that the Sabine, lying off the Battery, may be directed to take position to protect the shipping, or that I may be authorized to charter a steamboat, and have an order for troops from Governor's Island to man her for that purpose.

AUGUSTUS SCHELL, Collector.

The Collector then visited the United States frigate Sabine, and learned from her commander, R. D. THORBURN, that she could be got under way immediately upon the receipt of the necessary orders, and manifested the utmost readiness to render every assistance in his power for the protection of the shipping.

Upon the return of the Collector to the Custom-House, the following dispatches were received from Secretary CASS:

WASHINGTON, Sept. 3, 1858.

AUGUSTUS SCHELL, Collector, New-York:

Call upon General SCOTT, who is telegraphed by the Secretary of War, and coöperate in the protection of shipping and other public property threatened by rioters at Staten Island.

HOWELL COBB.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 3, 1858.

AUGUSTUS SCHELL, Collector, New-York:

The Secretary of the Navy has telegraphed the Commander of the Navy Yard, Brooklyn, to furnish an armed vessel and to coöperate with you. See him and let General SCOTT know of this additional order.

HOWELL COBB.

The Collector next visited the residence of Gen. SCOTT, but he had left the City. He then visited the Navy-yard and obtained the following order from Commodore KEARNEY, in obedience to instructions which he had received from the Secretary of the Navy:

NAVY-YARD, NEW-YORK, Sept. 4, 1858.

SIR: Upon the receipt of this you will proceed immediately with the vessel under your command to protect the foreign and American shipping and other property at Quarantine.

L. KEARNEY, Commandant.

Commander R. D. THORBURN, Commander of United States frigate Sabine, New-York.

This order was personally delivered to Captain THORBURN by the Collector; the ship was lying with two anchors ahead and fifty fathoms of chain. In one hour the ship was under way, in tow of two steamtugs, and was anchored near the shipping at night, when two guns were fired as a hint to the unruly spirits that they could not proceed any further in their incendiary work with impunity. In the morning the Sabine appeared like an apparition to the astonished gaze of the islanders, with her ports open, ready for action. Had any hostile movement been made the Sabine's boats would very soon have made prisoners of every one engaged in the attempt. At last accounts everything was quiet.

Quarantine News.

On Sunday morning, the brig Iremaculada, from St. Jago, bound for Bermuda, put into Quarantine in distress. Hardly a man on board was fit for duty, most of the crew being either dead or sick of yellow fever. The Captain died when a few days from St. Jago, from the black vomit, and was buried at sea. Shortly afterwards the first mate sickened of the same disease, and also died. Then followed the second mate and two of the crew.

At this time not a man was left on board who understood navigation. The crew were all sick and desponding from the fact that even those partly able to work were unable to manage the bark, and signals of distress were accordingly hoisted. The first vessel hailed sent a boats-crew to see what was wanted, and when requested to send a man on board to navigate the vessel home, absolutely refused, though there were several on board who could have been spared. Another vessel was also hailed, but with like result. At last a Boston ship was spoken, and with generosity sent a man who navigated the Iremaculada to New-York. Dr. GILLETTE on visiting the vessel, found her to be in a bad condition, and after caring for the sick as best he could, sent her some provisions She will receive the closest attention from the Quarantine authorities.

Quarantine Troubles.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Those in authority, who have control of the Quarantine, seem to have verified the old adage of "closing the stable door when the horse is gone," in regard to the protection of the buildings destroyed by cowardly wretches. Ten or twenty efficient men, properly armed, might have prevented the entire destruction of the hospitals, but it seems that not a single person, excepting one of the Doctors, attempted resistance; and if we may believe the reports published, some of the Harbor Police (chums of TOM BURNS, perhaps) assisted in the riot. Shall such carelessness be permitted any longer by citizens who elect men to office with the view of having some rights protected. The Commissioners should proceed at once to have new buildings erected; by proper exertion suitable hospitals may be completed before Winter sets in. A proper guard should be appointed to act as Quarantine police exclusively, having full power to arrest any person attempting to interfere or molest the most important safeguard that a commercial City, like New-York, can have. In the meantime let wooden buildings be put up as temporary shelter, until the more substantial ones are finished.

The excuse which the leaders in these riotous proceedings give for their conduct would not be tolerated, I believe, even by a Tombs shyster. If a man builds a costly dwelling alongside of a rwill stable, away from a good neighborhood, and then wishes to destroy it because it annoys him, and interferes with the beauty of his property, will not people say he is a fool? What is the difference? RIGHT.

The Blount Affair—Letter from Capt. De Riviere.

NEW-YORK, Monday, Aug. 2, 1858.

To the Editor of the Courrier des Etats Unis:

Finding myself at last delivered from the judicial prosecutions to which I have been so unjustly subjected, I come to ask of you a rectification of the facts which have been communicated to you, and which have been so calumniously applied to my person. I declare that I have never in any way been connected with fraudulent bankruptcies, consequently that I have never been mixed up with judicial proceedings in France. Such matters may relate to an individual whose name resembles mine, but I am indignant that they should be attributed to me or to any member of my family.

Since the year 1844, I have not ceased to belong to the French army, and I am now on furlough, (en non activité,) for temporary infirmities resulting from wounds received in the Crimea. (The very words of the document signed by Marshal VAILLANT, Minister of War.)

As to the matter which has served as a pretext for the persecution of which I have been the victim—the pretended abduction of Miss BLOUNT—I declare all that has been said a lying and malicious invention. I personally deny having ever abducted Miss BLOUNT, and still see Madame BLOUNT. My

And Mr. GOULD: "Your letter brought the first intimation of Mr. OLCOTT's noble gift. A greater one, by a trifle, than Mrs. Dudley's. It is a privilege to be connected, in any way, with such men—a high privilege, and I feel it deeply as such."

DEC. 31.—Mr. OLCOTT demands of the Trustees that they erect a new line of telegraph between Albany and New-York, in order, to enable him to carry down the City Hall clock.

But to carry forward the story to this minute would weary the patience of the reader, without subserving any beneficial end. Enough that it is all of the same kind. The Trustees who were the founders and Trustees of the Observatory were untiring in their zeal and liberality, unflinching in their confidence in GOULD; and even when all his visionary schemes had vanished in clouds, and his schemes for his own benefit, and the Observatory [illegible] to the end. It is certainly a creditable vindication of our early estimate of the business, and we doubt not it will open the eyes of Mrs. DUDLEY and the other foolish "citizens of Albany" who lent themselves to the mischievous policies of the season. We trust, after recording the legal adoption of the Council from the building, as we shall certainly have occasion to do before many weeks have elapsed, there will be no call for further [illegible]

Correspondence of the New-York Times.

LOGE PEER, Sunday, July 19, 1857.

DEAR R——: The log-hut in which we stayed last night consisted of two rooms, one of which answered for parlor, sitting-room, dining-room, pantry, kitchen, and, last of all, bedroom, for in two corners of it were beds with sheets dropped over them, in one of which slept the man and his wife, and in the other two females belonging to the family; the other room was a loft with loose boards thrown across the logs for a floor. This was filled up with beds placed alongside of each other. Into these we, with our guides and two others, making eight in all, crept and slept as we best could. The owner of this clearing was really a fine-looking man, and evidently designed for a different sphere. He had a small garden, in which the vegetables looked well, with the exception of cabbages. They appeared to have been just set out. I spoke of this to him, and asked if they would have time to head. "Not much," he said, "but I can't raise cabbages, the flea destroys them all." "Why that is very easily prevented," I replied. "Build a close board fence where you raise the young plants so as to keep them in shadow all day long, or, if that is too much trouble, get some shingles or slabs of wood and stick over them—the flea never crosses the sun-line." He seemed to think it very strange that a sportsman should teach a backwoodsman how to raise vegetables—especially propose so simple a remedy as that. I have no doubt it furnished a topic of conversation for the family for some time.

To the two clearings I have mentioned, I saw no books, not the sign of a paper, however old. The people take no interest in what is going on in the moving world around them—never asking any questions whatever respecting it. They are so completely away from the current of events that they do not try to keep up the connection, and I do not believe some of them have yet heard of our war with Mexico.

Taking in a new supply of butter here, we dropped down to Big Tupper's Lake. Hearing that a couple of gentlemen were encamped here, we made them a morning call. They had a fine bark shanty enclosed on three sides, with a fire in front. It looked nice and comfortable, and quite homelike to me in the woods; for I had been accustomed to them. "There," said I to my companions, "that's the way to camp out." For the prairie and desert, a tent is all well enough, but it is out of place in the woods, and bidding our fellow-sportsmen adieu, we pulled leisurely up the Lake. It was a warm day, and we were glad to take the shadows of the islands when we could. This is a handsome Lake, and like the Saranac, filled with islands covered with heavy forest trees. There is, however, no back-ground of distant mountains as in Long and Raquette Lakes. Mountains of moderate height form a frame-work for the Lake, and your vision is bounded by the immediate shores.

As we were passing one island the guide said that on that island, some hunters, two or three years ago, drove a deer. Taking the dogs over, they put them on the track again and drove him to the water's edge. But the deer, when he reached the shore, found he was on the brink of a precipice over thirty feet high. He was pressed so close by the hounds that he could not turn back, and cleaving the air with one wild bound he fell and disappeared in the water below; rising to *the surface again, he struck boldly out for the op*posite shore. But a boat that was on the watch started in pursuit, and overtaking him, through admiration of his bold and gallant leap, captured him alive. Soon after, however, he managed to escape, and a year after was killed.

Towards noon we came in sight of Buttermilk Falls, where the water, issuing out of the green forest, shoots a mass of feathery foam into the placid lake below. Before reaching them we stopped at a spring famous in this whole region. It is several feet in diameter, and the bottom dark with the debris of leaves that have fallen into it except where the water boils up; here it is sand, which is white as snow, and rolling over and over by the force of the jet, appears like some light, foamy substance. The water is pure, cold, and sweet as ever passed human lips. I wanted to take that spring with me. It is only a few rods around these falls to Bog River, up which our course lay. While the guides were transporting the boats and baggage across, I rigged my line to take some trout for dinner. But we found here the same difficulty that we did in coming down the Raquette. The heavy rains had so swollen and discolored the streams that in places where ordinarily, in a few minutes, one could catch all the trout he could carry, we were unable to take one. This, together with our ill luck after the deer, had now reduced us to low rations. This state of affairs required some attention, and we concluded that to live on pork in such a region of game as this, was disreputable, at least. I knew there were trout in abundance, but I could not raise one, either at the foot of the Falls or in the rapids above. I came across, however, in a little open space, as I was leaving the rapids, a very singular spectacle. It was the head of a young buck, with the body, bones and all gone, though it evidently had lain there but a short time, as some of the tissues still clung to the jaw bones. The fleshless jaws were stretched wide apart as if the animal had died in agony—probably bleating. On one of its horns was a large weasel completely impaled, the horn having passed clean through him. The weasel was still undecomposed, showing that he had been there but a short time. How came that weasel upon that horn was a problem I could not solve. Had the buck been wounded and lain down here to die, and this little animal, with that boldness which characterizes it, attempted to suck his blood before life was extinct, when the suffering creature, in a last death-struggle, by chance drove his horn through his enemy? This seemed inconsistent and almost impossible, but how came those two animals in that strange position. That skeleton head, with the jaws stretched wide apart, and a weasel impaled on one horn, interested me exceedingly, from the mystery that attached to it. Now and then the woods exhibit phenomena that even the old, experienced hunter cannot explain. Bog River, on which we had now embarked, we designed to mount to its source. It is a narrow stream, possessing no beauty, and awakens anything but pleasant feelings as it winds its sluggish way through the silent forest. But I had long known that it was famous for game, and that at its sources dwelt the moose. It was not in the hope of killing many deer that I determined to visit it, but to see them in broad day feeding on the wild meadows like calves in the fields, and visit the home of the Moose.

Boats ascend three miles of this river on their way to Little Tupper's Lake, a favorite resort of sportsmen. Beyond this point neither of our guides had ever been, and they as well as myself had to depend on the knowledge we had derived from others. The former knew one thing well, however, and CHARLIE did nothing but whine about it—that there were nine carrying places on the route, and these not beaten paths, over comparatively even ground, but over rocks and swamps and deep acclivities. The first, a half a mile in length, was not very difficult, but in passing over it I noticed the skill these men acquire in carrying their boats upon their heads. In crossing a marshy hollow, they came to a miry spot. Over this, they laid not more than four inches in diameter, [illegible] with far more steadiness and ease than we did. After launching our boats and rowing about four miles, we came to the "Winding [illegible]" so called from its shape—the water [illegible] itself down the precipice in a peculiarly graceful manner. This was a short but rough carrying-place.

Now throwing against the rocks as we attempted to force our way over rapids and now making our way under a huge pine-tree that spanned the stream, almost touching the surface, we kept on our tedious way until the last carrying-place was reached that we were to pass before we arrived at a chain of ponds where we were to camp for the night. We had got the impression that this was a short and easy one, but it proved to be the most desperate piece of ground over which I had ever seen a boat carried. The indistinct trail lay along the face of a steep mountain that overhung a wild, loud torrent below. The footing was so uncertain and the way so broken, that my heart smote me for having brought our guides into such an inhospitable region. When we again shoved our boats from shore all were thoroughly used up, for taking compassion on the guides, our party had carried nearly all the baggage, oars, benches, &c., each taking two loads across.

Just as the sun was sinking behind the forest we heard the loud, clear cry of the great Northern diver just ahead, and knew at once that we were near the three ponds, on one of which we must find a camping place for the night.

Yours truly, H.

The Democratic State Convention—Character of the Leaders—The Discussions and Nominations—Boston Congressional Districts.

Correspondence of the New-York Times.

BOSTON, Friday, Sept. 3, 1859.

The Democratic State Convention met at Worcester yesterday, the 2d, and there was a very lively time in that old Anti-Slavery town. The Beach-and-Butler controversy had suddenly lighted up the Democratic stubble, which burned away most brilliantly, much to the astonishment of the public, who had believed Democracy dead, whereas it was only roasting. Fired by the prospect of a change in the management of the Custom-house, in consequence of AUSTIN's crazy Congressional aspirations, the patriots poured forth, from Barnstable to Berkshire, resolved to have a claim in the new distribution of the spoils that is to take place whenever there shall be a new Collector appointed. There was a vast deal of intrigue going on the previous evening, the principal object being the elevation of JIM WHITNEY, the smooth-tongued and smooth-faced Superintendent of the Springfield Armory, to the office of President of the Convention. WHITNEY, who is now a professional Union-saver, was in 1849-'53 a professional Abolitionist, and is a fair sample of our office-trading Democracy—men who are ever ready to go with Mr. GARRISON on Monday, and to help lynch him on Tuesday, with the firm resolve to bury his remains with honor on Wednesday. He was one of the leaders in that arrangement by which BOUTWELL was made Governor of Massachusetts, and Mr. SUMNER a Senator. He voted for Mr. SUMNER. For his part in the "truck-and-dicker" arrangement of 1851, Gov. BOUTWELL made him Sheriff of Franklin County. When he had got all that he could get from the coalition,—Representative, Sheriff, and Delegate to the Constitutional Convention of 1853,—he went in for Slavery when CUSHING and PIERCE resolved to go for it; and when the Anti-Nebraska resolves were before our State House of Representatives, at the session of 1854, he opposed them, and supported the Slavery-extension project, being the only man who did so, and though he had been chosen to the Legislature by Free-Soil votes. He was rewarded with the Superintendency of the Springfield Armory, a place which BOUTWELL had expected, but as he was not so actively servile as WHITNEY, the latter got ahead of him, and there was nothing left for BOUTWELL but to turn Republican in despair, he having failed in his attempts on three or four fat offices. I mention these facts in WHITNEY's career in order to show of what "national" stuff our "national" Democracy is composed.

The Convention met at 11 o'clock, and a dispute about the New-Bedford two-tailed delegation was immediately commenced. One of the persons who spoke was concerned in the Shadrach rescue, that famous breach of the Fugitive Slave Law which occurred here in 1850, and which excited so royal a rage in Mr. WEBSTER's mind. It was the first violation of that famous law that took place, and the person referred to is understood to have sheltered the fugitive immediately after he was torn from the custody of the officers, in open Court. Another speaker was a notorious office-beggar in coalition times; and a third was a coalition office-holder, and a fourth was both beggar and holder of office in BOUTWELL's day. When the vote for President was taken WHITNEY received 397 votes, being all that were cast but six; and among those who conducted him to the Chair was the second officer of the State Government under the Coalition Administration. If the Union is safe under such circumstances, it may considered as beyond the reach of danger from any quarter. A Democrat will, ere long, and at this rate, be permitted to subscribe for the Liberator, without forfeiting his nationality. When a director of the underground railroad can belong to the Democratic Party, and hold office in the Custom-house, and lead off in the discussions of a Democratic Convention, the golden age of toleration may be claimed to exist.

The Convention went on to complete its organization pretty much after the fashion it had commenced. When the vote for Governor was taken it was decided as follows: Whole number of votes, 1,054; necessary to a choice, 528. E. D. BEACH had 634; B. F. BUTLER had 406; R. CHOATE had 11; E. C. BAILEY had 1. So Mr. BEACH was put up for a fourth time, being the only man who has been so honored since old MORTON retired from our Gubernatorial course. BANCROFT, DAVIS, CUSHING, BOUTWELL and BISHOP never were so far honored as to receive a fourth nomination. Gen. BUTLER then came forward and made a speech, in which he avowed his desire that Mr. BEACH's nomination should be made unanimous; which wish of his was instantly complied with, and made him feel as happy as a trout in a lime basket. The other nominations are as follows: Mr. THOMPSON, of Charlestown, for Lieutenant-Governor, who was a coalition Senator; Mr. PIERCE, for Treasurer, an excellent Boston merchant, and a thorough opponent of the Lecompton swindle; Mr. COLE, Secretary of State, a Berkshire man, said to be a good citizen; Mr. MEAD, of Nantucket, for Auditor, of whom I know little, and, therefore, will say nothing; and for Attorney-General, Mr. WILKINSON, of Dedham, who, for illiberality and bigotry, might have held a brief in company with the murderers of ALGERNON SYDNEY.

I am disposed to make large allowance for political cant, but I must say that the resolves passed by, and the speeches made at this Democratic Convention, are inexpressibly disgusting. They were enough to turn stomachs that have defied Buzzard's Bay and the Straits of Dover. The resolves were reported by the violator of the Fugitive Slave Law, already mentioned. Mr. HALLETT, who used to be one of the rankest Abolitionists in Massachusetts, canted with an eighty-Democrat power, but he could not get quite up to WHITNEY. Mr. BEACH was the only man who had any modesty in speaking.

There was a "demonstration" last night at Charlestown, which resembled Paradise Lost, in the respect that it proved nothing; a few dozen Democrats visiting Mr. THOMPSON, one of the nominees, who looked as prettily as when he accepted the Free-Soil nomination for the Senate nine years ago.

Our State campaign may now be considered as fairly opened, and the Custom-house party has triumphed in the nominations. It is reported that they would have bolted had BUTLER been nominated; and this report probably turned the scale in BEACH's favor. AUSTIN will now be nominated in No. 3; but we shall give him such a licking as will make him fancy that he is in a far higher (and lower) place—to wit, Queer-street, No. 1,000.

I think I may venture to say that matters are taking a good turn for the Opposition in the two Boston Congressional districts. It is now currently said that Mr. BURLINGAME will be nominated in No. 5, and under circumstances that will render his election a certainty; and that the entire Opposition will be united in support of a distinguished gentleman in No. 4—one universally esteemed—who will have to make great sacrifices to enter public life, which he has hitherto shunned. It is altogether probable that these rumors are true, and that the Democratic cloud that was rising over our districts will be dispersed before it shall have got up to the delege point. Let, with a good candidate in No. 5, the Democrats might accomplish something worthy of their ancient fame, even if they should fall short of victory.

THYME.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

An important error was made by your printer in my article of the 16th inst., in the substitution of "a hundred" for a thousand millions of dollars as the cost of the Railroads in the United States, and of "seven millions" for seventy millions, as the annual interest on that cost. While the magnitude of the sum involved is not so important an element in the question at issue as that of morals, still when correctly understood and appreciated, it is not a trifling matter.

Since my last communication I have seen data which authorize much larger estimates than those then given, viz: Twelve to fifteen hundred millions of dollars as the amount of investment, and a hundred millions of dollars as the annual interest. More than a hundred millions have been invested in your own State, and nearly or quite an equal amount in this.

Is not the saving of those amounts worthy the consideration solicited to the subject? And has not the moral aspect of the question a still stronger claim upon the time and sympathies of the public?

As intimated in my last, the accomplishment of this reform will be a great work, and its authors will merit—and sooner or later receive—a nation's gratitude.

But though great—it is simple—and perfectly practicable. The first step is to expose the existing evils. Let the suffering stockholders and the public once see how their money has been stolen and squandered, and the reform will be well commenced. Let them be constrained to give their personal attention to the management of the Corporations in which they are severally interested, and the remedy is certain.

If a sufficient number of votes cannot be secured to enforce a change in the management, the aid of an indignant public sentiment will effect it.

I notice the communication of your correspondent, "EX-Officer," in the TIMES of yesterday; and, while I approve of most of his suggestions, I fancy he aims too high. The first step necessary is honesty in your officers and managers. I do not mean simply to secure men who will not do wrong when they see a probability of detection; but you must have those who will not do wrong from a high regard to principle. You do not want the men distinguished for their "smartness" and "keenness," but those of good, substantial, solid sense—especially such as have no opposing interests to annoy them, and who are not so completely engrossed in private or in other public engagements as to disqualify them from acting as your agents.

A careful examination would probably show that most of the evil results to our railroad investments may be traced to some counteracting influences upon managers and officers.

Some are managers in other and connecting roads; others are stockholders in banks, mills, manufactories, or other enterprises, which have interests to be served in some way detrimental to your interests as a stockholder.

To hold the position of manager of a railroad company under such circumstances is not honest—in the party; and while there are so many equally competent men, without such disqualifications, it is altogether unnecessary; and it is both unwise and unsafe for stockholders any longer to permit it.

If stockholders will think and act upon these suggestions they may easily have a REFORM.

POLITICAL INTELLIGENCE.

Michigan.

The Democratic State Convention of Michigan met at Detroit on the 2d inst.—the Hon. ROBERT MCCLELLAND presiding. The Administration was overwhelmingly defeated. The Hon. CHARLES E. STUART received the nomination for Governor by a decided majority, on the third ballot, over WM M FERRON. The Detroit Advertiser says:

"The great battle for supremacy in Michigan came off in this city yesterday, between the National Administration army of office-holders on the one side, and the Douglas Democracy on the other. The result has been a most disgraceful and ignominious defeat of the Administration, and a terrible rebuke to BUCHANAN and CASS. Henceforth they must be ranked amongst the things that were. The Administration is nowhere in Michigan. The whole party, with the exception of a few insignificant Postmasters, was in the Convention, and was shamefully beaten on an issue it had sent orders from Washington to be raised. That issue was the question of CHARLES E. STUART's nomination—a man more cordially hated by the Administration than the most inveterate Republican in the Union."

The Contest in Illinois.

The great debate between LINCOLN and DOUGLAS, which took place at Freeport on the 27th ult., drew together a concourse of 15,000 people. Both the combatants were sharp and eager for the contest. Mr. LINCOLN had the first privilege of speech, and Mr. DOUGLAS replied. LINCOLN's speech was full of keen hits:

"When the whole matter turns out as it does, and when we consider who Judge DOUGLAS is—that he is a distinguished Senator of the United States—that he has served nearly twelve years as such—that his character is not at all limited as an ordinary Senator of the United States, but that his name has become of world-wide renown—it is most extraordinary that he should so far forget all the suggestions of justice to an adversary, or of prudence to himself, as to venture upon the assertion of that which the slightest investigation would have shown him to be wholly false. [Cheers.] I can only account for his having done so upon the supposition that that evil genius which has attended him through his life, giving to him an apparent astonishing prosperity, such as to lead very many good men to doubt their being any advantage in virtue over vice. [Cheers and laughter.] I say I can only account for it on the supposition that that evil genius has at last made up its mind to forsake him. [Cheers and laughter.]

And I may add that another extraordinary feature of the Judge's conduct in this canvass—made more extraordinary by this incident—is that he is in the habit, in almost all the speeches he makes, of charging falsehood upon his adversaries—myself and others. I now ask whether he is able to find in anything that Judge TAUSSILL, for instance, has said, or in anything that I have said, a justification at all compared with what we have, in this instance, for that sort of vulgarity. [Cries of 'Good, good, good.']

"Cannot the Judge be satisfied? If he finds, in the unfortunate case of my election, [Laughter.] that my going to Washington will enable me to advocate sentiments contrary to those which I expressed when you voted for and elected me, I assure him that his fears are wholly needless and groundless. Is the Judge really afraid of any such thing? [Laughter.] I'll tell you what he is afraid of. He is afraid we'll all pull together. [Applause, and cries of 'We will, we will.'] This is what alarms him more than anything else." [Laughter.]

Judge TAUSSILL spoke at Alton on the 28th ult., and gave a bit of his personal history:

"It is true that I once resided in Georgia; but it is not true that I was at any time a Nullifier, or that I disposed of any clocks, for I never owned one in the State; nor is it true that I was bred a Federalist. It so happens that my father was a Jeffersonian and a Jackson Democrat. However, I claim no credit for this, nor do I assume that it makes me better or worse than if my ancestors, out of respect to the traitor ARNOLD, had given part of his name to me. I recognize every man in this free country as the architect of his own reputation and fortune, and would have regarded it as no reproach to have been a clock-peddler, or to have followed any other honest calling; and although I honor and respect the memory of my ancestors and believe they will compare favorably with any man's, I claim no credit on their account. Whatever I am and have, I owe to the sweat of my own brow, the partiality of my fellow-citizens, and the blessing of a kind Providence; and God forbid I should ever reproach any man on account of the place of his birth, or his parentage. I am too much of a Democrat for that. The charge that I ever advocated repudiation, and the statement that Judge DOUGLAS went into the House of Representatives and replied to me, is simply untrue; as is also the statement made in another portion of his speech, of my having made a bargain with Mr. LINCOLN at any time, or in any manner, in regard to the United States Senatorship. These attacks of Mr. DOUGLAS have nothing to do with the questions at issue before the country. It is a matter of no consequence where I was born, who my ancestors were, or where I have lived; and such matters can only be dragged into the canvass to distract attention from the real issue."

The Campaign in Ohio.

The Hon. THOMAS CORWIN made a speech at Columbus on the 31st ult. He discussed, among other subjects, the Tariff question, contending that a tariff was unfavorable to slave labor, and would build up free labor at the North. The fight began on the Tariff question. Thirty years ago was begun what was ended in the English swindle. He had seen the birth of this fallow, and he hoped to be in at the death. It had been predicted, and the Democracy were fairly warned in 1846: "Just as sure as you repeal the tariff of '42 you will bring about a commercial revulsion." They repealed the tariff. Every year our imports increased, while our exports remained nearly the same. Our imports are of fancy articles, which may cost immense sums, and yet amount to hundreds of dollars sewed in the hem of one of our ladies, but you can't stuff in the hem of a pair of breeches a day's bread for the starving laborer of the Mississippi valley, however low the tariff may be.

In the conclusion of his speech he said: He had been driven into the Republican ranks as a matter of conscience. He believed in every word of the Declaration of Independence, and in every sentiment of the Democratic creed. His doctrines had always been Democratic, even when he was a Whig. Were the doctrines of CLAY, a slaveholder, He had heard him make the declaration—"I will never vote, and no earthly power shall ever make me vote, to carry Slavery into a Territory where it does not now exist."

So far as the Republican doctrines were concerned, he said, he utterly [illegible] them. He thought Slavery existed by virtue solely of State law, and he believed in [illegible] to all constitutional rights of the Slave States. Slave States should be admitted, but the question was not a part of the doctrine of the Republican creed, and he did not vote for it in practice. For if no more territory were added, and slavery was prohibited in all the Territories as he had, there would be no Slave States [illegible] admission.

The Hon. FRANK P. BLAIR, Jr. publishes the following card:

ST. LOUIS, Tuesday, Aug. 31, 1859.

To the Editor of the Missouri Democrat:

SIR: I send you for publication my address of contest with Mr. BARRET, who holds the certificate of election as a representative from this district. My only purpose in making this contest is to vindicate the rights of the people of this county, violated in my person, by the same corrupt practices which so long prevailed in Kansas, and by which slavery was made aggressive on Slavery Party management in that Territory. When the Senate committee of Oxford, Kickapoo, Shawnee and Delaware Counties, [illegible] to claim their seats and brought with them the same [illegible] perpetrators of the outrages of Kansas, they had become so skilled, in the same [illegible] the struggle for free principles in Kansas, that in Missouri in twenty days, instead of twenty days or five years, the battle ground of freedom, the [illegible] which defeated the same [illegible] Kansas in Kansas, were used against the same practices in Missouri. [illegible] triumphs the means of a more [illegible] overthrow.

I have ample evidence to substantiate the charges I have preferred in my notice, but as I desire to place it as complete as possible, I now [illegible] appeal to all honest men of every party to [illegible] with all the evidence in their possession [illegible] upon the case, and their aid in vindicating their rights and the rights of their fellow-citizens.

Respectfully, FRANK P. BLAIR, Jr.

Gen. HOUSTON has made several strong campaign speeches in Texas lately. A correspondent of the Galveston News, writing from Hempstead, says:

"Gen. HOUSTON spoke for some two hours. He commenced by saying that he felt bound to give some account of his stewardship, and he then proceeded at once to speak of the service he had rendered to Texas, and this subject occupied the first part of his speech. He spoke at length of the advantages Texas had derived from the Government obtained by himself and General RUSK for the sale of our territory. He abused President POLK—said he was a small man, very small—not to fight on the battle field in Mexico, &c. He abused [illegible] called him a puppy, &c. He also [illegible] MARSHALL, of the State Gazette—said he had been kicked out of some house in Mississippi, which kicking had sent him into Texas, and he had been kicked into being the Authorest of the Texas Democracy.

He spoke of the Mexican Protectorate, which he had advocated—regretted the fate of his bill—and if he was a younger man and could get the support of his conscience to the measure, he might be induced to lead a filibuster expedition into Mexico. He said the North had us down—that the foot of the North is on our necks, and that we could not help ourselves. He said the North, in case of resistance by us, could easily take possession of all our forts in the [illegible]—that the West alone could take possession of New Orleans, and with an army of two millions could hold us in subjection. He declared himself an advocate of the Union. He said that FILLMORE, and all men like him, ought to be put in a mad-house. He said he had opposed the Kansas-Nebraska act, and was still opposed to it. He attributed all our troubles to the passage of that act. He argued in support of the Missouri Compromise, and said it should never have been repealed. He concluded with a humorous complimentary address to the ladies.

Senator CLAY, of Alabama, writes a long letter to his constituents, closing as follows:

"I apprehend it will require greater sacrifices in the South than has characterized our past political struggles, to save her from great wrong by the next Congress, or from the triumph of Black Republicanism in the next Presidential contest. The political battles about Kansas will be renewed, perhaps, at the next session of Congress—when application for her admission as a non-slaveholding State will be made—and will be continued until she is added to the already preponderant North. We will be disappointed, I fear, if we expect an end of sectional strife or the beginning of that millennial fraternization of the United States, so often and so loudly proclaimed, while we try to extend the area of Negro Slavery, or even travel with our slaves in non-slaveholding States or the common Territories of the Union, or until the North is satisfied that her interest will be promoted by tolerating the "Curse of Slavery," or that the South is fully united and firmly resolved to maintain, even to disunion, those rights she refused to surrender to create, and ought not to surrender to preserve, the Union.

It was intended to give the Secretary a banquet and a civic and military reception. Gov. If public opinion can do it to show, there would be many satisfaction in knowing that a half dozen of the Quarantine rioters have been imprisoned. We should be enabled then to foresee the proper punishment of those who, regardless of life and the rights of property, are guilty of the act of insurrection; we should witness the establishment of an example that would warn others from deeds thus defiant of law, order and humanity. From the late and reluctant interference of the authorities, however, we have nothing to hope touching the energy of their action hereafter. They declined to prevent the consummation of the work of destruction; left the sick to perish exposed in their helpless condition to the pitiless storm; took no action to prevent the introduction of the fever into the City, where it now in consequence is said to exist; and urged no extraordinary sanitary measures to prepare for and mitigate the ravages of a pestilence, which their official neglect may bring upon us. There is, indeed, no room to anticipate that Tourneur and his accomplices are to be held answerable for any of all the fearful consequences that have resulted, or may yet result, from their inexcusable offence.

For, notwithstanding the efforts of a certain portion of the Press to whitewash the rioters, their offence is bare of palliation. Let it be granted that the present site of Quarantine has, in the progress of population, become inappropriate. It is equally true that the fact has been recognized by the government of the State, and every legislative action demanded by the residents in the neighborhood has been promptly taken. At a great but ill-judged expense the property at Seguine's Point was bought and built upon, and a mob rendered it useless. Strict justice might have insisted that, since Staten Islanders thus nullified and trampled upon laws passed at their own volition, no further legislation should be granted. It might and should have insisted that the incendiaries who destroyed the buildings at Prince's Bay be brought to punishment before any other steps should be taken to gratify an insurgent population. It unfortunately took another course. The Legislature hastened to expedite the work of removal. It packed off a Commissioner to repeat the old petition to the Legislature of New-Jersey for a place on Sandy Hook. This effort failing, with unexampled activity an act was passed appropriating a large sum for locating the establishment upon one of the shoals in the outer bay; a measure that must presently have rid the island of its nightmare forever. While preparations for carrying the act into effect were actually pending; at a moment when it was obvious that the State had done its utmost to remove the evil; at a moment when to employ mob-law and violence would not only be an act of signal ingratitude, a work of criminal supererogation, but would expose the island itself, and this filthy City, to the desolation of a fearful plague, these people have applied the torch, turned out the sick to perish, and let loose a fatal disease upon an unprepared community. An act of more wanton turpitude is inconceivable, an act more deserving of the full vengeance of the law. Had legal forms, though of questionable application, been complied with, the proceeding would have been no less censurable. Had there been a formal indictment of the place as a nuisance by a Grand Jury from the body of the county; had the Sheriff been furnished with authority to abate it; and had he summoned the entire population as a posse to aid him, the proceedings at a moment so critical would have still wanted excuse. As the case stands, it lacks the color of law, prudence, and humanity. It is condemned at every point.

Could we believe punishment of the guilty to be honestly contemplated, and that accessories both before and after the fact are to be brought to book, we should trust that action of the Press which, after the first demonstration, by its undisguised sympathy and approval, stimulated the second, might not be overlooked. In this task of inciting to riot, by justifying the rioters, the Herald and Tribune were equally efficient. The former, with characteristic demoniacal ferocity, went the entire length of justifying the insurgents. The latter, with insincere and shallow reservations, equally characteristic of a print whose interest has long taught it a Jesuitical concealment of vicious principles and proclivities the bold utterance of which would insure its pecuniary ruin, enlarged on the provocation to the crime, affected to demonstrate the impracticability of a different course, and labored to establish the impression that this, if there ever can be, is a case where the people are authorized to disregard the laws of society, and proceed directly to a desired end. It is hard for the Tribune to conceal its liking for any act, or system, or theory, conflicting with established order. Its sympathy in the present case with that of other like-minded authorities, unquestionably went a great way toward prompting the second scene of this scandalous drama; and the award of justice will be open to the censure of criminal partiality if it exempt such lawless energies from their measure of punishment. If the laws are to be administered, let them reach all implicated. Thus only can we hope to silence an incendiary Press, whose teachings not only imperil private property, but public safety, health and order.

Slander—Proof Demanded.

In the first explosion of sympathy for the midnight incendiaries and assassins of Staten Island, the Tribune thought proper to libel not only the entire people of New-Jersey, but the entire body of New-York merchants. It charged the former, through their representatives at Trenton, with being bribed to refuse the cession of Sandy Hook for Quarantine; and the latter with having administered bribes, not only there, but at Albany, in order to prevent removal from the actual site. Assured of the falsity of these accusations, but aware that the Tribune is more profoundly versed than we in the business of corruption, we have waited patiently for either a retraction of the charge, or for specifications to sustain it, and we have waited in vain. We now call upon the Tribune to furnish the one or the other. If the allegations be recklessly false, as we hold them to be, the inventors should be held answerable. If they are well-founded, let the merchants of New-York be duly censured.

The Tribune is, of course, aware of the difficulties involved in its case. It has to prove that New-Jersey was bribed, not to do what it was obstinately, chronically, almost unanimously bent on not doing; and that New-York merchants offered this ridiculous bribe, when every interest of the New-York merchant is on the side of having the thing done. With all its practice in defending absurdity and paradox, our neighbor will, we apprehend, find its power taxed to the utmost in this instance; and yet it must either make its case good, or consent to be regarded as it is, a slanderer.

In your task, then, accept the penalty. It is high time the authority of mob law, and assistants of order, and property, and character were brought to account.

Neutrality of Telegraphs—A New Line.

The President's telegram to the Queen, it will be remembered, contained diplomatic as well as congratulatory matter. It suggested that steps should be forthwith taken to establish the inviolability of the Ocean Telegraph in periods of war. As it unfortunately happens that Her Majesty conducts foreign affairs through the office of a Secretary assigned to that duty, no response has yet been received to this overture, and we shall probably have to wait some time for an authoritative expression of the British view. In the meantime, the French Government has accepted, if it have not anticipated, the President's idea. The Patrie, officially inspired, uses language like this:

"Would an English squadron respect the communications between France and Algeria, or a French squadron those between England and Canada? Ought the commerce of other countries to suffer by the quarrels of two rival nations? Would not a new conquest be achieved by the cause of peace were the neutrality of telegraphic communications to be proclaimed? Another bond would then unite mankind, and a fresh step would be made towards the fraternal union of all Christian nations."

The neutrality of the telegraph, land and marine, is obviously carrying the American project one step farther, and may involve results the President will hesitate to approve. One great use of the land telegraph to powers, who may not choose to maintain large standing armies, is to expedite the transportation of troops from points of security to those threatened with attack. It belongs to the same order of strategy as the employment of railroads for that object, and is, in fact, an indispensable portion of the system. The value of the railroad in this point of view, the Emperor—who is, perhaps, one of the ablest theoists in military affairs now living—has attested in directing his energies to those connecting all the fortifications of the French frontier. Now, the plan of foregoing the use of the telegraph in military operations, as proposed by the French journal, must, logically, be attended with the non-user of railroads for such purposes—a sacrifice of little moment to first-rate powers, but fatal to the security of the weaker. On the same principle, therefore, that we refuse to accede to the abolition of privateering, must we decline to accede to this new proposition. It goes to render the strong stronger, and the weak weaker. No policy could be more unfortunate for the United States.

With regard to the submarine lines, however, the case is different. Nations actually at war may have equal right to use them. Or, if constructed by mutual enterprise and capital, they may, as in the instance of the Atlantic Cable, terminate at both ends in the territory of one, and, therefore, in the event of a war between the two governments, be unfairly controlled by the one to the detriment of the other. In that case, the equity of neutralizing the line must be admitted, and should be reduced to practice. That it will be so there is reason to doubt. The British Government notoriously aided in the Atlantic enterprise with especial reference to its value as an additional security for her colonial possessions on this continent in the event of war either with the United States or with a European State. To yield to either the French or the American proposition would be to forego this incalculable advantage, a sacrifice we should hardly venture to anticipate from the most liberal of cabinets. The utmost we can expect is the establishment of the principle of inviolability and impartiality; that all messages, at all times, peaceful or belligerent, shall be faithfully passed irrespective of their import, and that none of the perfidy chronic with British Home Secretaries, in regard to Post-Office correspondence, shall be practised with the telegrams. From the present line we have no more to ask.

Another question, however, at once presents itself. Is it absolutely certain that we cannot have a rival line of submarine telegraph, one end of which shall rest on our own shores and the other upon the shore of continental Europe? This question was propounded to Lieutenant MAURY by the Committee of the House of Representatives, while the bill in regard to the Atlantic Telegraph was under consideration. The Lieutenant, assured of the existence of a remarkable plateau between Newfoundland and Ireland, and confident of the irregular level of the ocean bed elsewhere, at once expressed his belief that the line he had indicated was the only one practicable, and that an American terminus was therefore out of the question. There is, however, very strong reason to think this dictum of science entirely erroneous. There is potential ground for suspecting the plateau to be a creature of fancy, and for believing the ocean bed there to be quite as mountainous as at any point further southward, from the Western Isles to Cape Hatteras for instance. The whole business turns upon the reliability of deep-sea soundings. Professor MAURY assumes this as a certainty, and therefore assumes the existence of the plateau, although he laboriously discredits the surveys of Lieutenant BERRYMAN. Other scientific authorities, however, at least as eminent, hold that the report of the best sounding apparatus yet devised is only proximately correct as to certain depths, below which it is quite likely to produce uniform results; in other words, to produce the erroneous idea of a level bottom, when in fact it gives no information of the bottom at all. The leading article for the current month of that standard periodical, Silliman's Journal, takes this view. Professor TROWBRIDGE, its author, entered upon the investigation at the request of Professor A. D. BACHE, of the Coast Survey; and after thorough inquiry, and the application of mechanical and mathematical principles, and the results of experience to the subject, shows beyond doubt that there is no basis whatever for the belief in the existence of a submarine plain on the parallel designated by Lieutenant MAURY. To use his own language:

"The idea of a 'plateau' existing between Newfoundland and Ireland is not warranted, it seems to me, by any observations that have yet been made. The range of errors may be as great as five hundred fathoms, which would admit of the existence of a submarine mountain on this line half as high as Mount Washington. A true section of the Atlantic can only be determined by improved modes of sounding, since from the preceding discussion we may be warranted in the conclusion that it is practically impossible to determine the greatest depths of the ocean by the methods now in use."

We may add, that this conclusion is confirmed by the report of the persons in charge of laying the cable, who constantly noted variations in the quantity of the cable paid out for equal superficial distances, only to be accounted for by the supposition that they were passing over vast valleys and mountain ranges, [illegible] with the loss of a [illegible], which were not indicated in the Berryman-Dayman surveys.

With these grounds for believing that the bottom of the sea is as available at one point as at another, and with the probability furnished by the actual working of the Irish-American cable, that the magnetic current will traverse the widest stretch of the Atlantic, we trust soon to see a new enterprise inaugurated, rendering us independent of a single line controlled by a foreign Government. We have mentioned a connection with Europe by way of the Western Islands. Such a line would have the advantage of relays at a mid-ocean station, and of passing through and terminating upon the territory of Portugal—a power not likely to be involved in unfriendly relations with the United States. The project commends itself to the enterprising. There will be ample work and splendid rewards for as many transatlantic lines as can be laid. And we may thus secure most effectually that neutrality of communication which a line in the sole control of a foreign Government can not afford.

The Bombardment of Djidda.

The indignation of the French journals that the English should have taken upon themselves to bombard Djidda single-handed, without waiting for as many months as might be necessary for France to send a frigate round to the Red Sea to share in the glory of the exploit, is not likely to rouse the sympathies of the rest of mankind. The French have so long enjoyed the unenviable notoriety of taking to themselves the lion's share of the glory attaching to the most trumpery skirmish in which any other power happens to act in concert with them, that the world is not very likely to weep over their disappointment in this instance. All the nations of the continent have already offered up their hecatombs at the shrine of French glory, and have got very little thanks for their pains. The Germans, and Poles, and Italians, who followed "mon oncle" round the world, and left pyramids of their bones on all his battle-fields, from Monte Notte to Moscow, and have for half a century enjoyed as the reward of their sacrifices the kicks of their own sovereigns and the unlimited perusal of French blague, were hugely delighted to see England in the Russian war, after so many centuries of cold méfiance, caught in the same trap. France took up arms in the cause of European liberty; France won Alma, and Inkermann, and Tchernaya, and besieged Sebastopol, and carried all the forts by assault, and then came home, and with the aid of a language diffused over the European continent more widely than any other, and of manners more than ordinarily cordial and communicative, succeeded in telling the tale to their own satisfaction, and the infinite disgust of the British. In the military operations next undertaken in combination, against Canton, there was a repetition of the same comedy. The British in the assault on the city had a land force of three thousand men, the French but nine hundred. In accordance with a very common piece of military politeness, the post of honor was accorded to the inferior force, and the French entered foremost through the paltry breaches, from which the frightened pigtails fled in dismay, and Paris was forthwith assured that France had captured Canton.

An expedition against Madagascar of the allied forces, to chastise the pirates of those regions, was the next thing talked of, and we were all waiting to hear of the French having overrun the whole Malagasy territory, while the British fleet was coming to anchor, when John Bull suddenly grew restive, and for the first time for a long while undertook a little bombarding and "chastising" on his own private account—at Djidda—without even asking leave of the Emperor, or waiting for the assistance of a French fleet.

The shelling of Djidda we thought and still think the most righteous military operation in which any British ship has been engaged for a long time. We think that if the principle be once established that all sorts of abominable crimes in all parts of the Turkish Empire may be perpetrated upon Christians without the possibility of punishing the offenders until a special commissioner comes down from Constantinople, the sooner Christians leave it the better. The Porte will not send down commissioners every day, to examine into every outrage; and if it be once allowed that the Pasha on the spot must hold his hand until a functionary arrive from Constantinople, crime will rarely be punished at all. Nobody will seriously assure us that the government of an Empire can be administered by means of special messengers sent all over its surface, to call murderers and highwaymen to account two months after their offences are committed. The idea even is preposterous. If Turkey has no local authorities competent to afford protection to life—and it appears she has not—foreign powers must do as the British have done, and administer justice themselves.

Possibly the bombardment of Djidda was partly due to a desire on the part of England to get rid forever of the incubus of the French alliance—or in the East, at least, where prestige is of so much importance to her cause before the Mohammedan population as the avenger of her own wrongs. Whatever the motive which dictated it, the act itself is worthy of approval; and we may add, that all symptoms of a dissolution of the alliance itself ought to afford nothing but matter for rejoicing. So far as we have seen of it, it has been an alliance fruitful in nought but bloodshed and implements of destruction. While the people of England and America were rejoicing over a successful application of science to the purposes of civilization and Christianity, the allied monarchs were gloating over its application not to the purposes of legitimate defence, but of wicked aggression. They constituted themselves a roving commission for the general regulation of the whole earth, and have managed since their confederation to shed torrents of innocent blood in pursuit of objects as doubtful in point of morality as chimerical politically. The alliance is diverting England from the path in which her greatest and most lasting triumphs have been won, and precipitating her into an insane rivalry in fleets, and armies, and fortifications. It has already stopped her ears to the cries of the unfortunates who lie buried in the dungeons of Spielberg and Naples, and is all but extorting from her a connivance at the Slave-trade. If it needed any other flaw to damn it, it would have it in the open condemnation of the British people, who are sick, and sick with reason, of seeing their Queen put through a course of political morality by the hero of the second of December. We love peace, and we desire to see it reign forever, not between France and England only, but between all nations; but it must be peace based on principle and mutual good offices. A peace which can be confirmed by such ceremonials as were lately witnessed at Cherbourg is a peace which barbarians might enjoy for the sake of its repose, but it is not such a peace as Christian men should desire.

The Cargo of Negroes at Charleston—Quandary of the Carolinian Authorities.

We copy from the Charleston Mercury, of Wednesday last, the opinion of the Attorney-General of South Carolina on the case of the Echo's cargo of Africans. A law of that State, passed in 1835, forbids any free negro or person of color to be brought into the limits of the State, "under any pretext whatever, by land or water," and in case the law is violated, the negroes so brought in are to be arrested by the Sheriff, taken before a Magistrate, committed to prison or held to bail, tried by a jury of three freeholders, ordered to leave the State, and, in case of failure, to be sold. We learn from the Mercury that, on Sunday morning, "a number of gentlemen" called upon Sheriff CAREW, of the Charleston District, and laid before that officer "formal information," with a view of requiring him to proceed under the act above mentioned. The Sheriff, to do him justice, appeared sufficiently willing, but, as official responsibilities often moderate zeal, he thought it prudent first to take advice from Messrs. WHALEY & LOAN, his lawyers, and also from the Attorney-General. But these high sources of counsel did not agree. In fact they took opposite grounds, Messrs. WHALEY and LOAN advising the Sheriff that it was his duty to seize the Africans, while the Attorney-General decided that he had no business to touch them. The latter based his opinion upon certain acts of Congress authorizing the introduction of the negroes in question, which acts he conceded to be constitutional and valid, and ingeniously *dodged the manifest conflict between the Na*tional and State laws, by saying that inasmuch as the acts of Congress were made in pursuance of the constitutional powers of that body, they were "part of the law of South Carolina."

The Sheriff, it may be believed, found himself but little relieved by the wisdom of his advisers, and, therefore, in order "to satisfy all parties," he made a formal demand for the surrender of the negroes upon the U. S. Marshal, which demand that officer, as a matter of course, declined to comply with. The Mercury informs us that the Sheriff, "being unwilling, under all the circumstances, to force a conflict of jurisdiction between the State and the Federal Governments," concluded "to forego further measures." In this he showed his discretion. But what a precious opportunity to vindicate the Slave-trade has thus been lost? When will the friends of that traffic have such another?

The Africans, it would seem, are well cared for under the direction of the U. S. officials. They have been removed from Castle Pinckney to Fort Sumter, and a telegram, received yesterday from Washington, states that the Secretary of the Navy has directed the steam-frigate Niagara to repair immediately to Charleston for the purpose of taking them back to Africa. A considerable portion of the chivalry are undoubtedly grieved to witness such an act of emancipation; but they seem to regard it as inevitable. Having failed to seize the negroes through the instrumentality of Sheriff CAREW, they have evidently desisted from all efforts in that direction. No such blessed combination of Christianity and cotton-raising as the Palmetto philanthropists had in view, is reserved for these three hundred poor black savages.

The Observatory Feud.

It is not the ordinary gift of business men to pamphleteer with the off-hand readiness of a penny-a-liner. For this reason probably, and because of the lamented death of Mr. WILDER, the reply of the Trustees of the Dudley Observatory to the attacks of the Scientific Council, and of Mr BARNARD, has reached us when the whole subject of controversy is nearly forgotten, crowded in fact from the memory by an access of far more important topics. We can only recall the circumstance, that when the last event previous to the present occurred, the leaguer of Fort Dudley was fairly established; the Trustees without thundering for admission, and the Council within asseverating with the fervor of Mrs. Micawber that they would never desert B. A. GOULD. It is like a memory of times long gone by, to open and read this brochure. Journalist and savan will alike be prompted to grasp their weapons anew, and fight the early battle over again.

If, indeed, there be more than one side on which to fight. A mature examination of this vast paper pellet of the Trustees, satisfies us that there is really but one side. What with their careful history of the entire enterprise; their adjudication of the various claims to credit and influence for what has been achieved; their adjudication of the censure for what has been ill done, or recklessly done, or left altogether undone; what with their revelations of correspondence among the various combatants in other days, and down to the present; and their exhibit of figures and facts from the account books of the Corporation; there is certainly no tenable ground left for the scientific people to stand upon. They are in the position of intruders, who, through no devotion to science, but merely to prosecute a factious quarrel with a hostile scientific clique, have thrust themselves into the business, and are resolved to make their false position good, in defiance of reason and right. Mr. GOULD, the object of their ill-judged friendship, is proved, over his own handwriting, to be a weak, incompetent, visionary person, wholly unequal to the management of a great institution, and without the confidence or respect of the best scientific names in the country. He has kept none of his engagements with the Trustees—has poured out their money like a spendthrift, for instruments that were to be in use more than two years ago, and one of which the Trustees have never seen, though one is said to be packed up in saw-dust somewhere in the Observatory. The splendid heliometer which was to be the crowning glory of the institution, and towards the construction of which Mrs. DUDLEY, at the instance of Mr. T. W. OLCOTT, contributed $14,000, is still unfinished. This job, it will be remembered, Mr. GOULD solicited and procured for one SPENCER, a friend of his. Something after, now more than two years and a half ago, he suggested that it would be better for Mr. SPENCER to visit Europe and examine the heliometers at Greenwich and elsewhere, the Trustees having assented, and [illegible] gentlemen having a conference to go over the state [illegible] departed and returned, and to this day there has not even a working draft of the instrument been prepared. And this case is but a specimen of Mr. GOULD in reference to every detail of Observatory management. Idleness, delay without reason, and expense without limit; until, as the Trustees show in a remonstrance, signed by the leading citizens of Albany, last January, rendered a change of policy necessary. In truth, there is no end of the whole narrative more marvellous than that such interference should have been needed. Why a half dozen men of thorough business habits, and backed by scientific authorities at least equal to the scientific council, should have borne with the devious trifling of GOULD, and loyally seconded, and supported but his chimerical schemes to the verge of folly and ruin, and only desisted when urged by outside pressure, is one of those seeming inconsistencies only to be explained on a supposition of their willingness to sacrifice everything for peace. Their forbearance for the long period during which their director has lengthened his rôle of empire, is a monument of human patience. In their review of the points made by the savans on behalf of GOULD, and in the support of the case in all its details as originally stated by Messrs. OLCOTT and WILDER, the Trustees are equally successful. The inefficiency, the arrogance, the indolence, the extravagance of GOULD are demonstrated; the slurs he cast upon the institution in his foreign correspondence are produced in legible black and white; his private jealousy and hostility toward PETERS are verified by his own letters; and all his claims to gratitude for having served the Trustees gratuitously are exploded. In fact, there is nothing left of the late director, and very little of Professor BACHE, who is found under his own hand exalting the donations of Mr. OLCOTT above those of Mrs. DUDLEY, and who indorses PETERS, as one of the ablest practical astronomers living; the same OLCOTT whom, in his late pamphlet, he treats with vigorous contempt, and the same PETERS whom he styles "a specious, entertaining and pedantic theorist." Messrs. PEIRCE and HENRY come out of the affair with no worse stain than that involved in their adherence to Mr. GOULD.

In leaving this subject, and we leave it with pleasure, we sincerely indulge the hope that the Scientific Council will see the impossibility of holding their own against such batteries, legal and logical, as the Trustees bring against them, and may capitulate forthwith. They have still reputation to save; it will be lost by protracting this absurd contest further. Discretion is here the better part of valor: let them surrender.

The Opening of the Nicaragua Transit Route.

The American and Pacific Ship Canal Company inaugurated their first movement towards opening the route by an excursion down the Bay on Saturday last, on board of the steamboat Cass-Trissart, formerly the American Eagle. About one hundred persons were on board, among whom were Señor YRISSARI, the Central American Minister, JOSEPH L. WHITE, JOHN B. YRIVARREN, the Agent of the Company, and many other gentlemen, and also several ladies. A band of music was engaged for the occasion, and a fine collation was provided by BAGNELL & RAY, of No. 19 Wall-street, after the most approved Downing style. The boat will sail for Lake Nicaragua on Monday, under the charge of Captain STOCUM, with several persons formerly associated with the Nicaragua route. Two other boats, the Carolina and the Liberty, will be dispatched for the same destination soon, to run on the river San Juan. Shortly after the boat left the pier, the company assembled in the cabin, and were called to order by Jos. L. WHITE, who presided. The first toast proposed was in honor of

"GENERAL YRISSARI, the Minister from Central America to the United States."

General YRISSARI replied in Spanish, and substantially as follows: He was very much obliged for the compliment paid to him as the Minister from Central America; at the same time he could not arrogate to himself any other merit than that of having conscientiously discharged his duty, not only for the benefit of the country he represents, but also for the United States. If, however, the United States have derived any benefit in these negotiations, while at the same time Nicaragua has sustained no detriment, he was heartily glad of it. He had no doubt that the work which had been so auspiciously begun would succeed; that the United States and Nicaragua would be joined in one common interest. He had no doubt that the Pacific and American Ship Canal Company would meet with great success, and concluded by giving us a toast, which was received with cheers by the company.

Mr. J. B. PUSSOT, late Brazilian Consul at this port, gave

General MANUEL JEREZ, with all the hopes we ought to entertain from his liberal and enlightened views of Amer.

Mr. PUSSOT paid a high compliment to General JEREZ, as a gentleman connected with the liberal party of Nicaragua, who had come accredited to this Government, to cooperate with General YRISSARI. He is connected with the liberal party in Nicaragua, and would do all in his power to promote amicable relations between the two Governments.

Mr. JOHNSON proposed the health of Mr. WHITE and Mr. PUSSOT.

JOSEPH L. WHITE responded. To speak of the trials, the trials, the interventions we have been compelled to meet, would require more time than it would take for this boat to reach the dock from which she started in New-York. It was not their object to gain new ground, but to preserve what they already have against the machinations of man of large fortune, who were ever ready to bribe Nicaragua officials, and who had bribed them—not here, but there. Men whose greedy dispositions and greedy power were at all times extended for money, for which they were willing to sacrifice the honor and the interests of their country, and those vested rights which they had pledged to companies. We have had to fight against these men, against the State of Costa Rica, against filibusters, and against the machinations of steamship commodores, who were willing to expend their wealth, not in charity, but to rob those who are willing to extend the influence, enterprise and energy of this country in opening new lines of communication, not by what they have above, in the brain, but by what they have in their pocket. We have carried on this contest, with the help of good and true men—and when I speak of men I mean this man, laying his hand on YRISSARI—(cheers) who are ready, at all times, to stand up for justice and to go for the right. He further tendered his resignation to his Government, on the ground that they were willing to do injustice. We have had to fight against Costa Rica, against filibusters.

A VOICE—"And against Commodore Vanderbilt."

Yes, we have been swallowed up in the great French steamer, and have been vomited up again like Jonah on dry land, though here we are not dry. [Great laughter.] That is what a Hooster, where I once lived, would call a [illegible] steamboat, and I propose that we drink it. We have fought filibusters, Commodores, money, machinery, time, and we have won; and, as General TAYLOR would say, if there was anybody in the world, or the rest of mankind, who desired to enter the field, we are ready to fight them.

The speech was received with laughter and applause.

Mr. PUSSOT paid a high compliment to Señor YRISSARI and Mr. WHITE, as the two persons who had borne the brunt of this battle. After referring to the vacillating course pursued by the Press on the subject, he gave:

The Press of New-York—Which always eventually got out the truth.

The sentiment was responded to by one of the supporters, wishing success to the enterprise.

A lady proposed the following:

The Atlantic Cable and the Nicaragua Steamer—May the continuity of either never fail.

The sentiment was received with three cheers.

A gentleman proposed the health of JOHN B. YRIVARREN, Esq., the agent of the Company, to whose business talents he paid a high compliment. Mr. YRIVARREN replied.

The boat soon after reached Pier No. 1, after a short circuit up the North River, and the Company separated, much delighted with the excursion.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC.—Some of the artists were [illegible] on Saturday, and there was no performance in consequence thereof. To-night ROSSINI's celebrated opera buffa of the "Barbiere" will be played, with Mme. GIAZZON as Rosina, Signor GASSIER as Figaro, and Signor LANCETTA (who has just returned from a trip to Europe) as the Count. In this opera Mme. GIAZZON has won her best triumph, the music lying easily within the compass of her voice, and its florid character being just what such a pliant organ can accomplish.

WALLACK'S THEATRE.—Mr. H. C. COOPER's English opera company commences an engagement at this house to-night. BALFE's opera of the "Bohemian Girl" is selected for the occasion, and will be played with the following cast: Miss ANNIE MILNER as Arline, Mr MISANDA as Thaddeus, Mr. GUILMETTE as the Count, Mr. RUNGEMSON as Devilshoof. Much may be expected from so many fresh voices. The orchestra will be under the direction of Mr. H. C. COOPER.

BURTON'S THEATRE.—Mr. COLLINS, the Irish comedian and vocalist, enters on his second week to-night. A new bill is put up for the occasion, containing three pieces, namely, "The Fortune Hunters," the "Happy Man," and "Make Your Wills." Mr. COLLINS' engagement has been attended with decided success.

An improvement has taken place in one feature of the entertainment at this house which merits a word of passing commendation. We refer to the orchestra. Mr. E. MELKENBAUER, who now has charge of this department, has secured a perfectly excellent band of players, and conducts it with decided skill. We are glad to see that the management gives it a prominent place on the programme. It is entitled to consideration, for it contains some of the best soloists in the country.

LAURA KEENE'S THEATRE.—The addition of Mr. and Mrs. BLAKE to the company at this house tends naturally to the "legitimate." To-night we are to have "The Rivals," with a very excellent distribution—Mr. BLAKE playing his famous character of Sir Anthony Absolute, and Mr. JEFFERSON being the Bob Acres. The historical play of "Louis the Eleventh" is to be produced to-morrow night. The frequenters of this well conducted establishment should always remain for the dance by Mlle. LAMOUREUX.

NIBLO'S GARDEN.—The theatre will be closed, to-night, for the purpose of fully rehearsing the tableaux of "Jessie Brown," which drama is to be produced to-morrow night. Miss AGNES ROBERTSON plays her original character of the heroine. The performances are under the direction of Mr. DION BOUCICAULT.

NATIONAL THEATRE.—Newly decorated, and painted, and furnished with all sorts of elegancies and improvements, this popular place of amusement reopened for the season on Saturday night, under the well-approved auspices of Mr. PEADY. The festival programme is repeated to-night, and will be found full of good things. Two new dramas, written expressly for the reopening, will be presented, namely, "Azim al Barmeki, or the Veiled Prophet of Khorassan"—a dramatic version of MOORE's poem; and "Nick Whiffles"—a stage rendering of a famous story. The afterpiece is "Brian O'Linn." An unusually strong company appears in all these pieces—the best company that has ever played at this house.

BOWERY THEATRE.—The Fall season opens at this house to-night. A new and original play in three acts, called "Ireland's Golden Age," will be produced for the occasion, with new and splendid scenery, dresses, &c. The comic pantomime of "The Magic Barrel," and the drama of "The Bride of Lammermoor" will also be played.

BARNUM'S MUSEUM.—THIODON'S interesting Theatre of Arts is still the attraction here. It is preeminently worth seeing. Also the Aquaria.

PALACE GARDEN.—The band under the direction of Mr. HARVEY B DODWORTH, will give a grand concert here to-night. In the afternoon the Iroquois Indians go through their characteristic scenes—very curious and amusing. To-morrow Mr. BAKER gives a monster concert, when the increased orchestra will be augmented by the drum corps of the Seventy-first Regiment. The Palace Garden is the most pleasant place of open-air amusement in the City, and is conducted with faultless propriety.

WOOD'S MINSTRELS.—Negro Minstrelsy in the old style with HORN, BUDWORTH and WHITE as the principal interpreters, is the standing attraction here. A fine programme is arranged for to-night.

CAMPBELL'S MINSTRELS.—This famous corps has been received with great favor during the past week. The Hall (No. 472 Broadway) has been crowded, and the leading attractions are of course announced for repetition during the present week.

City Items.

EX-MAYOR MILLER, OF NEWARK, N. J., FOUND DROWNED IN THE EAST RIVER.—The body of Mr. JAS. MILLER, formerly Mayor of Newark, N. J., and Adjutant-General of the State, was discovered on Saturday evening in the dock at the foot of Beekman-street. Some letters and papers found on his person led to his identification. His gold watch and some money were untouched. The body was taken to the Second Ward Station-house, and a telegram sent to his family in Newark, announcing its recovery. Mr. MILLER left his home on Friday afternoon to attend the complimentary dinner given that evening in Jersey City to CYRUS W. FIELD, Captain HURSON and others, in commemoration of the completion of the Atlantic Cable. He did not attend the dinner, and it is believed that while suffering under the effects of temporary aberration of mind, he crossed the ferry to this City, and while wandering about became bewildered and fell into the dock. Mr. MILLER had lately met with some losses in his business, and had shown symptoms of mental aberration. An inquest was held yesterday on the body, and there being no marks of violence, a verdict of "Supposed drowning" was rendered. Mr. MILLER was aged 65 years, and has left a numerous and interesting family. The remains were taken last evening to Newark for interment.

MORE AMERICAN HORSES FOR THE EMPEROR OF THE FRENCH.—The Ariel, which left this port on Saturday, took out three horses for the Emperor of the French. They were fine-looking animals of a dark brown color, and about three years old. Two of them were procured near Boston, and the other near Montpelier, Vt., by Mr. WELLINGTON, of Mass., who gave himself much trouble to obtain them, and who accompanies the horses to France. The animals are well quartered on board the Ariel, and the walls of their stalls are thickly padded so as to prevent them suffering any injury during the passage. The price of their passage was $500. The Emperor appears to have been so well satisfied with the span of Vermont horses that he purchased a year ago, that he was induced to order these now on their way to France.

THE REGULARS' PRIMARY ELECTION.—The "Regulars" held their primary elections in the various Wards in the City Saturday evening, for the choice of Delegates to the Democratic State Convention, which meets at Syracuse on the 15th inst. These primary elections are held under a joint call issued by the People's Committee and the Regulars, and the delegates they elect will present their claims for recognition to the Syracuse Convention in opposition to the delegates who will be chosen this evening under the call of the Tammany General Committee.

MAYOR TIEMANN AND THE MAYOR OF SAVANNAH.—The following is the reply of Mayor TIEMANN to the message of Mayor TURNER, of Savannah, which was read at the Atlantic Telegraph Celebration in this City on Wednesday last:

NEW-YORK, Wednesday, Sept. 1, 1858.

His Honor, Mayor Turner:

On behalf of the citizens of New-York, I send a hearty response to the kindly message of the citizens of Savannah, heartily congratulating them on the auspicious bond of amity between the two kindred nations, prominent in the great work of laying the Atlantic Cable. The fruit of increased human knowledge, it promises to enlarge the sphere of peace and good will among men.

DANIEL F. TIEMANN,
Mayor of New-York.

"DELTA SIGMA."—Under this title a new Society, composed of young men, members of evangelical churches on the East side of the City, was organized on Friday evening last, at the house of one of the members in Henry-street. The object of the Society is, the mutual religious improvement of young Christians, by delivery of Essays on Bible subjects, comparing of Religious Thoughts, &c. The following gentlemen were elected officers: Dr. VERANUS MOSES, President; JAMES H. MANIERIX, Vice President; FRED'K G. HANSEN, Secretary, and JAMES G. COOPER, Treasurer.

OPENING OF THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS.—The public schools of this City and Brooklyn will reopen this morning for their regular sessions. The free academy will open on the 15th inst. THE TERRITORIAL ELECTION.

The "Gentile" Ticket Defeated—Unusually Large Vote—Proceedings in the United States Court—Army News.

From Our Own Correspondent.

GREAT SALT LAKE CITY, U. T., Saturday, Aug. 7, 1858.

The election for Territorial and County officers, which was held throughout the Territory on Monday last, passed off, as far as we are able to learn, very quietly and peaceably.

In this City, although there was, for the first time since its foundation, votes cast in opposition to the nominees of the Church, yet it created no disturbance, and but little excitement.

The Mormon leaders, perfectly satisfied that we could not carry the day, did not trouble themselves farther than to order all of their subjects to vote; in consequence of this order, however, the vote polled this year far exceeds that generally cast in this City.

The highest number of votes on the Union or "Gentile" ticket, for any one person, was 37. The highest number of votes cast was 1,056. Those on the Church ticket who received this vote being voted for also by the "Gentiles."

The following are the members of the Legislature elected in this county on Monday last, and the votes cast for each, as appears from the returns filed in the Secretary's office:

REPRESENTATIVES.

John Taylor	1,053	Joseph A. Young	1,019
Orson Hyde	1,056	H. B. Clawson	1,019
Daniel Spencer	1,056	Wm. H. Hooper	1,014
A. P. Rockwood	1,017	Edwin D. Woolley	1,017
Hosea Stout	1,019	Alexander McRae	1,018
Jos. W. Cummings	1,018	S. W. Richards	1,019
Jesse C. Little	1,019

This election will, however, be contested at the next sitting of the County Court, is having been conducted illegally in many respects. In the first place, there is no record on file in the Secretary's office of the election of any Justices of the Peace in this precinct since 1852, and it does not appear in the archives of his office that any certificate of election has been given to a Justice of the Peace since the time. The law provides that the senior Justice of the Peace in each Precinct shall be the judge of the election and shall appoint a clerk, &c. The Justice of the Peace who served at the late election acted without authority, not having a certificate showing that he possessed any authority. Again, the judges of election, such as they were, did not watch or protect the ballot-box. At noon they were all absent, and their places filled by others not legally authorized to be there, one of whom was a candidate for the Legislature, and was elected upon the Church ticket. Thirteen Representatives were voted for and elected, although this Precinct is only entitled to twelve. This was done in consequence of the law passed at the last session of the Legislature, attaching Green River County—in which Fort Bridger is situated—to Great Salt Lake County, and, of course, increasing the number of Representatives in the County thus formed. This law, however, has never been signed by Governor CUMMING, who was at the time in the Territory, but was signed by BRIGHAM. Its validity, therefore, though recognized by the Mormons, will not be recognized by the present Secretary of the Territory.

In consequence of this law there were but few Mormon votes cast in Green River County. The residents of the County living at Fort Bridger and on Green River, voted, however, for the officers to which they are entitled, and elected by a majority of over 100, the Democratic ticket, upon which WILLIAM J. GRANGER, Esq., formerly of Kansas Territory, was their nominee for Representative in the Legislature. The official returns have not yet been received, so that we have not the exact number of votes polled. This secures us one Gentile Representative in the next Legislature, for, although the Mormons will contest his right to a seat, they cannot sustain themselves in their position.

A most interesting case of habeas corpus was tried during the past week before Chief Justice ECKELS and Associate Justice SINCLAIR, of the Supreme Court of this Territory. It seems that about four years ago the wife of Mr. H. POLYDORE, a lawyer residing in Gloucestershire, England, joined the Mormons and ran away from him. Stealing their only child, a daughter, from the boarding-school at which she was placed, she brought her in a company of Mormons to this place.

The father, in the meantime, made every effort to discover the whereabouts of the mother and child, and a considerable time elapsed before he found out that they were here among the Mormons. Finding that his individual efforts would be unavailing in procuring the return of his child, he applied to Lord MALMESBURY, the Minister of Foreign Affairs in England, for the aid of the Government in his behalf. An application was made, therefore, by the English Government, through Lord NAPIER, to Secretary CASS, for the assistance of our Government in the matter, who thereupon forwarded instructions to General JOHNSTON, directing him to use every effort in his power to find the child and secure its restoration to the father. As soon as the civil authorities had become established here, the case was placed in the hands of the United States District Attorney. The child, who is only twelve years old, was found with her aunt, who is the fourth wife of SAMUEL RICHARDS, one of the twelve Apostles. The mother of the girl had returned to the States.

Upon examination the Court ordered that the child should be restored to her father, and she will accordingly be sent on as soon as a suitable escort can be found, to Lord NAPIER, at Washington.

The Hon. C. E SINCLAIR, one of the Associate Justices of this Territory, arrived in the last mail from the States. It is with pleasure that we announce his arrival, for we have long looked for the arrival of the Judges who are necessary for the organization of the Judicial branch of our Territorial Government.

We are informed that KIRK ANDERSON, Esq., formerly connected with the editorial department of the Missouri Republican, is now on his way out here with a complete printing press, and everything requisite for the publication of a large newspaper in this city.

This has been more needed here, perhaps, than anything else.

With a regular weekly communication to the States, a "Gentile" Press, and an independent Judiciary, we can wish for no other aid to effect the regeneration of this Territory than the influence of energetic, fearless ministers of the Gospel, and these we must have.

The Six'h Regiment of Infantry, in command of Col. ANDREWS, arrived at Fort Bridger during the past week. This regiment have come over the new road explored last Summer by Lieut. BEYANS, which, raving the old road at the crossing of the South Fork of the Platte, passes through Bridger's Pass, and strikes the old road again at Fort Bridger. They report the road as a good one in regard to grass and water, but it will take a great deal of work to make it equal to the old one for travel. It is, however, some 75 or 80 miles shorter.

The Sixth has been ordered to proceed immediately to Fort Walla Walla, the seat of the Indian war in Oregon; they will not, consequently, enter the valley, but move from Bridger directly up the Oregon trail. Lieutenant-Colonel CARBY, with two companies of the Tenth, and one company of Dragoons, will relieve Col. HOFFMAN in the command of the post at Bridger. Several of the officers of the Army now stationed here have procured leaves of absence.

Governor CUMMING has rented the large, fine house of the late Secretary BARRITT. He boarded up to this time with Mr. STAINES. A. B. C.

Brigham to the Saints.

Our correspondent at Salt Lake City forwards files of the Deseret News. BRIGHAM YOUNG has directed the publication of his discourses to the people after a long lapse, during which neither his utterances nor those of the Elders have appeared in the columns of the Mormon organ. A speech of BRIGHAM, delivered in June, contains a passage which indicates that the Presidency decides to remain in occupancy. The stories of the contemplated departure of the Saints to some retired spot appear to be entirely exploded. BRIGHAM, after a long homily, very temperately worded, gives his followers this counsel:

I will now say a few words on business affairs. A road up Provo cañon is much needed, and we want ten or twenty companies of laborers to go to work upon it forthwith in order to finish it in about fifteen days, so that you can go into the valleys of the Weber where there is plenty of timber.

I understand that a Company has been chartered by the Legislative Assembly to make that road, and if those men will come forward we will take the responsibility of making it. We shall need about five hundred laborers. I also want a mill-race dug some three quarters of a mile in length, and an excavation made for the foundation of a grist-mill. When that is done, we will plan something else, for we want every one to have the privilege of being actively engaged in some useful occupation. We want men to labor in every mechanical pursuit that they can, for I believe that the time will come when we will have to depend upon our own resources, and I pray the Lord to so hedge up the way and shut down the gate that we may be compelled to depend upon our own manufacturing for the comforts of life.

Last Spring I wanted to detect some spirits that I could not make manifest to the people, only in the course I then took. There are those who, when they know that they have liberty to act in a certain manner, do not care about moving in that direction; but if you say they cannot or shall not, they are then very anxious to do so. That clears reminds me of the Frenchmen who loaned his money, and upon learning that the borrower was likely to fail, asked him when he could pay him. The answer was, "To day, if you wish it." "Why! have you got it?" "Yes." "Oh, if you have got it, I do not want it; but if you have not got it, I want it very bad." With the exception of a short time during the late difficulties, all persons have always had the privilege of going away from here when they pleased, and have been repeatedly invited to do so if they wished to, and a certain class did not avail themselves of the privilege; but when I said that they should not go until I gave them permission, we learned those spirits and they have gone.

I want the clay well ground and well worked over. I want the pure in heart to receive their blessings, and to be free from the oppressions of the wicked.

God bless you brethren and sisters: Amen.

Tiffany & CO.,
NO. 550 BROADWAY, NEW-YORK,
ANNOUNCE THAT THEY HAVE RECEIVED THE ENTIRE BALANCE OF THE ATLANTIC TELEGRAPH SUBMARINE CABLE
Now on board the
U. S STEAM-FRIGATE NIAGARA.

In order to place it within the reach of all classes, and that every family in the United States may possess a specimen of this wonderful mechanical curiosity, they propose to cut the Cable into pieces of four inches in length, and mount them neatly with brass ferules.

Each piece will be accompanied with a copyrighted fac simile certificate of that it is cut from the genuine Cable. Twenty miles of it have been actually submerged and taken up from the bottom of the ocean. This will first be sold in precisely the condition in which the great Cable now lies in the bed of the Atlantic.

Orders will be received from dealers and others for not less than 100 pieces at a time, at $25 per hundred. Retail price 50 cents each.

Each order must be accompanied by the money, in funds current in New York, as it will not be possible to open accounts. A register will be kept of the orders, as they are received, which will be filled in turn without favor or partiality.

A large portion of the specimens will be ready, it is expected, for delivery within a week.

NEW-YORK, Aug. 31, 1858.

ATLANTIC CABLE NOTICE.

TIFFANY & CO. beg to inform the public that, although they have arranged with the Novelty Works—(in addition to their former facilities)—to mount the Atlantic Cable, the demand is so great that they are not able to supply the orders for the four-inch specimens as fast as received. They, therefore, apprise the trade and others that while they will continue to receive orders, to be filled in their turn, as heretofore, they will sell the cable, in the state it comes from the Niagara, at 62½ cents per lineal foot, in lengths of not less than forty feet, and in smaller quantities at $1 per foot, which will enable purchasers to have sections mounted to suit themselves.

CAUTION.

Attention is respectfully invited to the following letter from

CYRUS W. FIELD, ESQ.

NEW-YORK, Aug. 24, 1858.

MESSRS. TIFFANY & Co.—Gentlemen: At your request, and in justice to you, I am bound to state that I disposed of the entire balance of the Atlantic Cable, on the United States steam frigate Niagara, to your firm, and that if any other party claims to have any portion thereof, it must either have been procured from you, or from the small specimens which were distributed on board before the cable was laid, in which case the quantity was too small to be worthy of notice.

There is a peculiar interest attached to the cable which you have bought—twenty miles of it were actually submerged in the ocean and recovered, while through all of it the electric signals were being transmitted during the whole time occupied in laying the cable.

Of course, any quantity of cable can be manufactured in England, and many specimens have been circulated in this country, but to few if any of these, attaches the peculiar value which the cable purchased by you possesses, from the fact that they were part and parcel of the cable which is now actually laid. I remain, gentlemen, very truly your friend. CYRUS W. FIELD.

This work possesses peculiar attractions. The characters are instinct with a living and vivid power. The hero of the story, Lucy Tyrrell, is a real character; and the work is consequently quite as much matter of fact as fiction. It is a book in all respects unusually readable, and in many respects worthy a place among the classic literature of the land.
From the Springfield Republican.
This is a work of high literary merit, and of unusual interest to American readers. It illustrates the most interesting period of our history. The age of American chivalry—and it gives us a true picture of the opinions and habits, as well as leading personages of that eventful period.

THE PATENT CARBON PAINT FROM COAL.—This valuable paint is unequaled in beauty, economy and durability, for ships, iron work, machinery, japanning of leather and metals, roofing, and general house-painting. Compared with lampblack it dries quicker, endures far greater heat, and is a preservative against corrosion is unequaled by any paint in the world. It is a pure and beautiful black, a remarkably quick dryer, mixes readily in all colors, and consumes but one-fifth the oil that lampblack requires.

THE LATE CHARGES UPON IN GREENWICH.—Coroner Gamsey yesterday took the examination of Hiram McAnza, who was [illegible] on Tuesday evening last by Patrick Kearns, [illegible] street. The physician declares that [illegible] will not survive his injuries. McAnza corroborates the statement of the affair as published in the Wednesday's Times. He was sitting on his door step, when Kearns without any provocation, stepped to him and called him a "son of a b—h," and [illegible] in the west and abdomen. McAnza [illegible] one of his children in his arms at the time. He had known Kearns eight years but never had had any difficulty with him, and could assign no reason for the assault. The wife of McAnza told the same story. At the close of the examination, Kearns, who had been previously locked up, was remanded to prison to await the result of the injuries inflicted.

FATAL FALLS.—MARY HALL, an Irish woman, 40 years of age, fell from the third story of No 27 Ballard street, and died from the injuries received. Norman McCue, a boy 5 years old, fell from a upper window of No. 38 Baxter-street, and was killed instantly. Inquests were held Saturday on both [illegible] and a verdict of "Accidental death" rendered in each case.

Police Intelligence.

ENGLISH BURGLARS ARRESTED.—Two suspicious looking fellows were observed, on Saturday morning, about 4 o'clock, by Officer Harrold, of the Twentieth Precinct, prowling rather suspiciously about various dwellings in his beat. The officer, to put them off their guard, commenced playing drunk, [illegible] and wound up his interlude by falling flat to the pavement, apparently stupidly drunk. The [illegible] at once took out their burglarious tools and [illegible] to enter a dwelling house; but they had [illegible] commenced operations when the officer [illegible] upon them in such double-quick time that they were unable to escape. The officer then took them to the Station-house, where one of them turned out to be Nick. Clinton alias Dick Monnessey, a noted English burglar, who has already spent one or two terms in State Prison for burglary. The second prisoner, also an Englishman, gave his name as Thomas Keller. He stated that he had fallen in with Clinton the evening previous, and that Clinton endeavored to persuade him that he could earn a living easier by turning burglar than by following a [illegible] trade—that he could dress better, and pass off for a gentleman instead of a rude mechanic. He alleged that they were not attempting a burglary when arrested; but that his companion was simply showing him how neatly a house could be entered without detection. A bunch of delicately-worked keys and a heavily-loaded six-shooter, which were found in the prisoner's possession, made the Justice [illegible] as to the correctness of his statement. A [illegible] of elaborately-wrought keys and a loaded revolver were found on the person of Clinton. Both were locked up for trial.

DISORDERLY HOUSES BROKEN UP.—Captain Carpenter of the Seventh Precinct, and a posse of his men, made a descent last Saturday evening on No. 8 Mulberry street, as alleged disreputable house, kept by a woman named Teresa Walker. They took in custody Mrs. Walker, five girls and six m.n. Mrs. W. was held to bail to answer before Justice Osborne, to answer the charge of keeping a disorderly house. The rest were discharged. On the same evening Captain Kendall of the Eighth Ward, made a descent on No. 5 Wooster street, and had all the inmates locked up as accomplices to answer.

LAYING IN A STOCK OF SAUSAGES.—Between 2 and 3 o'clock on Saturday morning, officer Hall, of the Twentieth Ward, detected two youths coming out of the butcher shop of Jacob Smith, No. 521 Eighth-avenue. One had the money-drawer in his possession and the other had a formidable string of sausages thrown over his back. On seeing the officer they darted off at their brisk est pace, but the officer succeeded in arresting one of them—him of the sausages. The prisoner, who gave his name as John Dunn, was locked up by Justice KELLY to answer. The place was entered by forcing open one of the shutters of a front window.

A LAWYER CHARGED WITH PERJURY.—Mortimer de Mott, a lawyer, who has an office in No. 16 Walnut-street, was arrested yesterday, charged with perjury. Mr. G. L. Tallmadge, of No. 402 Fourth-avenue, is the complainant. He alleges that the perjury was committed before the Supreme Court, and that through the commission of the perjury, de Mott is retaining $2,000 of his (Tallmadge's) money in his possession. The case is to undergo examination before Justice KELLY at the Jefferson Market Police Court. De Mott was detained to await the result.

PASSING COUNTERFEIT MONEY.—A well-dressed young man, giving his name as Charles Lacher, on Friday evening passed a $3 bill on the Brandon Bank of Vermont, at the Boot store of Thomas Oates, No. 179 Second avenue. He called for a drink, gave the bill in payment, and was handed back the proper change. The bill was soon discovered to be worthless, and the young man was pursued and arrested. Another counterfeit bill on the same bank was found on his person. He was detained by Justice [illegible] for examination.

PUSHED DOWN STAIRS.—Mrs. Bosy Kerrigan, residing at No. 247 East Thirteenth-street, on Saturday evening had an altercation with John Hunter, living in the same house. She pushed Hunter down a flight of stairs, fracturing his skull, and, it is believed, fatally injuring him. Mrs. Kerrigan was arrested, and committed by Justice SEMMES to prison.

SLASHING.—Morris Morris and Henry Kober, two Germans, had an altercation at a late hour Friday evening, at No. 36 Essex-street, when Morris drew a knife and stabbed Kober in the side, inflicting a dangerous wound. Morris was arrested, and held by Justice SEMMES to answer. The injured man was taken to his residence.

FIRING EXPLOSIVE.—John McCarthy, a boy about 14 years of age, was handling a loaded pistol, Friday evening, in Thomas-street when it suddenly exploded, injuring three of his fingers and wounding another boy in the leg. The boys were taken home and their wounds dressed.

HARTSON TO SOUTHERN MERCHANTS.

I understand that a large quantity of counterfeit and imitation Schiedam Schnapps has been sent to this market from Philadelphia, and sold to some of the Wholesale Grocers, Druggists and Liquor Merchants, who are offering it for sale much below my wholesale price. Brooklyn Intelligence.

A SAD AFFAIR.—A CITIZEN BEMBED AND FATALLY INJURED.—At an early hour yesterday morning, Officer BOYE, of the First Precinct, while in the vicinity of Johnson and Lawrence-streets, was called upon by a citizen to take charge of a man found in the area of house No. 38 Lawrence-street. The officer immediately obeyed the summons, and upon visiting the place indicated, found upon the street in an insensible condition, Mr. THEODORE ANDREWS. He caused him to be taken to his residence, No. 30, the same street, when Dr. PALMERE and Dr. Surgeon BELL were called in. Mr. ANDREWS continued in an insensible condition for several hours, when he recovered and stated that he crossed the Ferry about 8 o'clock Saturday afternoon, and was then somewhat under the influence of liquor. He went to the house of Ex-Policeman ADAM HAUGHEY, No. 36 Fulton-street, and after remaining there a few hours he ordered a carriage to take him home; and that is the last he remembers. The physicians, upon examining Mr. ANDREWS, found a severe scalp wound on the top of his head, and also that his neck had been dislocated, or the spinal column was so injured as to render his recovery hopeless.

Mr. ANDREWS also made known that he had been robbed of about $200 in money and a gold watch. Upon learning these facts, the Deputy-Superintendent of Police and Capt. SEARS, of the First Precinct, commenced to investigate the case.
